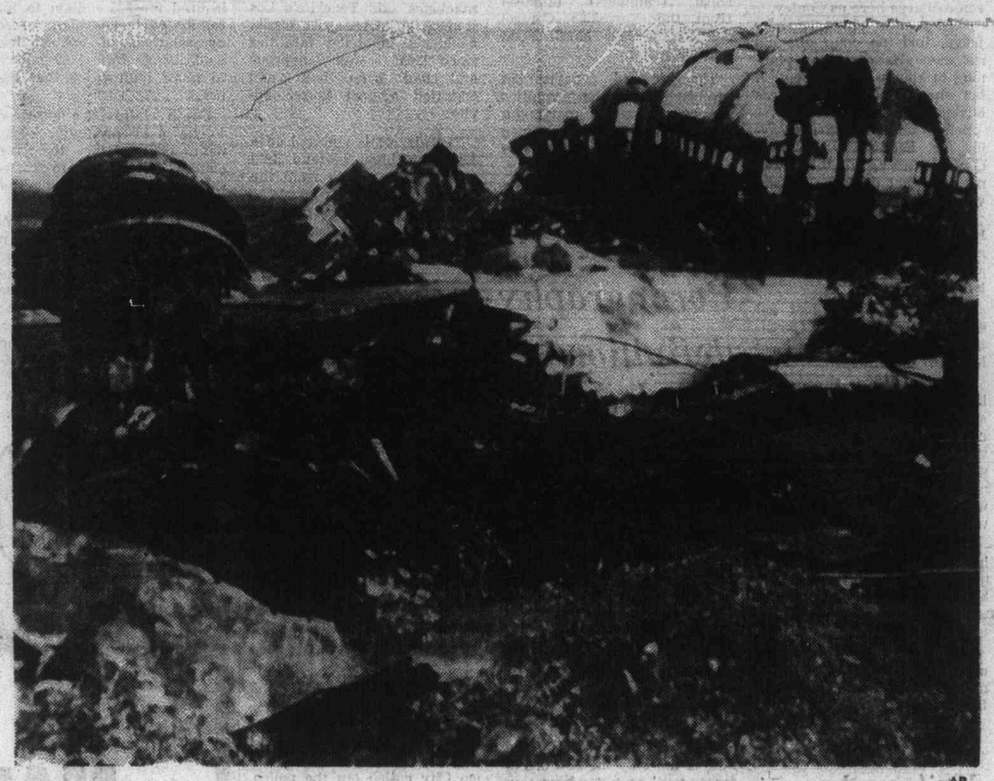
574 die as two 747s collide

Bomb, misunderstanding caused worst air disaster



—AP

Blackened wreckage is tomb of 248 people aboard KLM jumbo jet

SANTA CRUZ DE TENERIFE, Spain (UPI) — Spanish officials said Monday a misunderstanding involving the American and Dutch pilots of two Boeing 747s and the airport control tower might have caused the crash that killed 574 people — history's worst aviation disaster.

Spanish newspapers said air-control conditions at the Tenerife airport were unsafe. One said it was "a disaster that could be seen coming."

It was a disaster that likely would never have happened had not the Canary Island Liberation Movement — a group that wants the mid-Atlantic islands severed from Spanish rule — planted a bomb in the terminal at Las Palmas airport that exploded earlier Sunday.

The blast, which injured eight people caused both the chartered 747s to be diverted to Santa Cruz airport.

Casualty counts varied. The Dutch KLM airlines and Pan American World Airways issued revised casualty lists putting the number of dead at 574 with 68 survivors. Earlier, the Spanish government put the death toll at 562 with 72 survivors.

KLM said all 248 persons aboard its jet — none of them known to be Canadians — were killed.

The Dutch plane, roaring down the runway at 186 miles an hour on takeoff, ripped through the U.S. jet Sunday afternoon and both planes burst into flames. The heat was so intense that the runway asphalt melted.

Pan Am said 326 persons died aboard its plane, which originated in San Francisco, and 70 survived.

One survivor, Jordan Tartikoff of San Francisco, said the speeding KLM 747 already had lifted off the ground when it hit the Pan Am plane.

"The other plane was off the ground," Tartikoff said. "If it had not been, we would all have been hamburger meat. The other plane hit the top of our plane. He had definitely already lifted off."

Insurance experts in New York and London said the insurance and legal liability bill from the collision will exceed $250 million. A U.S. Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said it might take years to determine who has ultimate responsibility for the crash.

A controversy raged over the cause of the disaster. The Spanish news agency Cifra reported the Pan Am pilot may have misunderstood control tower directions and instead of turning into a parking area moved onto a runway in front of the KLM jet.

Pan Am issued a statement in New York denying the Cifra report.

Some foreign pilots suggested there had been a misunderstanding involving the two pilots and the control tower and that the radioed English language directions had been too heavily Spanish accented to be entirely clear.

'It just drove into us'

VANCOUVER (UPI) — The sole Canadian survivor of collision of two Boeing 747 jetliners in the Canary Islands spoke to a reporter by telephone Monday from his hospital bed in Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Spain.

"I was one of the lucky ones," Roy Tanemura of Kelowna said in the telephone interview. "Things happened so fast. We didn't see anything because of the fog . . . It was so foggy we couldn't see it coming. The Dutch plane just drove right into us."

Tanemura escaped with an injured ankle.

His wife, Aya, and travelling companions Dr. Walter and Yvonne Mitchell, also of Kelowna, did not survive. Elizabeth Caza of Windsor, Ont., was also listed among the dead on the Pan-Am plane.

Tanemura, a member of a land survey firm, said he scrambled through the ruptured fuselage of the plane believing his wife was right behind him.

"She didn't come with me," he said. "I guess she couldn't make it up and get out."

Community loses 28 friends

LAGUNA HILLS, Calif. (UPI) — The aviation disaster in the faroff Canary Islands shocked residents of the wealthy retirement community of Leisure World south of Los Angeles: Twenty-eight of their friends and neighbors died aboard the Pan American 747.

A group of 35 residents were on a tour. Only seven survived.

"It's very sad, very tragic," said Barbara Farley, city editor of the Leisure World News, a weekly newspaper distributed in the community.

"We've had a lot of calls and people have been coming into the office to ask about their friends."

Gardom seeking solution

No place to hold disturbed teens

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Monday his "inherited problem" of what to do with mentally disturbed juveniles was under study but that answers were not easy to find.

Gardom was answering questions asked in the Legislature by Conservative leader Scott Wallace (Oak Bay) who wanted to know why the provincial government couldn't provide adequate holding areas for youngsters with serious mental problems.

Wallace referred to the case of a 16-year-old youth who murdered a 10-year-old girl in Vancouver and had so far had his sentence deferred six times because there were no facilities for him in the province.

He also referred to the suicide of a 16-year-old girl in a Courtenay jail. She had been placed in an RCMP cell because there was nowhere else to hold her.

Gardom agreed that facilities for youngsters with psychiatric problems were inadequate, but he added that he wasn't sure whether the problem belonged to him or Health Minister Robert McClelland.

The attorney-general told the Legislature that the 16-year-old girl who hanged herself in Courtenay was a runaway from a foster home. She was picked up by the RCMP on March 16 after admitting being responsible for a series of tire-slashing incidents.

Routine checks were made with welfare officials and the probation officer and it was agreed that she should be held by the RCMP pending her court appearance, Gardom said.

She was placed in the cells at about 5:30 p.m. and had been visited by a matron every 20 minutes, Gardom said. She was found hanged at 1 a.m.

A three-tired program to fight juvenile crime did not include facilities for disturbed youngsters, the attorney-general told Wallace.

Woman, 21, acquitted in baby kidnap

SURREY (CP) — Rena Marie Conley, 21, of Hayward, Calif., was acquitted Monday in provincial court on a charge of kidnapping a two-week-old baby in September, 1976, from this Vancouver suburb.

Judge W. S. Selbie said the prosecution had not presented conclusive evidence to show Conley knew she was involved in a kidnapping.

Conley was charged, along with Sandra Ann Hanoum, 25, also known as Sandra Ann Gillen with kidnapping Cameron David Green and taking him to California.

Hanoum, also from Hayward, currently is fighting extradition to Canada in a San

Unemployment insurance bill

Controversial debate slapped with closure

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced plans Monday to invoke closure, used fewer than 30 times since Confederation, to limit debate and force second reading of a controversial bill that will tighten the qualifying standards for unemployment insurance.

After introducing a motion in the Commons to restrict debate to only five hours, Manpower Minister Bud Cullen told reporters "a majority government should be able to get its legislation through."

"Why should we be subject to the tyranny of a minority?"

MPs from high unemployment areas, including members of the governing Liberals, have vehemently opposed a proposal to increase the qualifying period for benefits to 12 weeks.

A person now must work eight weeks out of the previous 52 to qualify for benefits.

Cullen told the Commons he will introduce a motion today to set the time allocation. The motion itself can be debated for two hours.

He said there already has been adequate debate on the bill, which has been discussed in the Commons 13 hours and five minutes on four sitting days.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, immediately attacked the closure move as "a clear indication that the government plans to go ahead with a bill that will deprive thousands of Canadians of benefits, partic-

Sea turns tables on 'harnessing' ship

When it was built in Victoria 10 years ago, the federal oceanographic ship Vector was described as an important part of the international commitment "to harness the sea."

Last Thursday the tables were turned in Quatsino Sound when the sea — or part of it — harnessed the Vector.

The 130-foot vessel, which has been used for scientific studies, ran aground and had to be towed free. Federal officials made no public report of the incident and were not in a position to furnish details Monday.

Quatsino Sound cuts deeply into the northwest part of Vancouver Island.

The Vector was towed to the Victoria shipyards of Yarrows Ltd., during the weekend and will undergo close examination today to determine the extent of bottom damage.

Striking against AIB

Montreal millers defy work order

MONTREAL (CP) — Striking workers at three Montreal-area flour mills have voted to continue a walkout despite temporary injunctions issued by Superior Court Monday ordering them to return to work, said a union official.

The workers voted at a meeting Monday to continue their walkout which began eight weeks ago to protest an average 40-cent-an-hour wage rollback ordered by the federal Anti-Inflation Board.

The injunctions, effective immediately and covering a seven-day period, affect 400 workers at Ogilvy Flour Mills Ltd., Robin Hood Multi-Foods Ltd. and Maple Leaf Mills Ltd.

Carl Masson, an official of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, with which the strikers are affiliated, said that if the injunctions are defied, the union could face fines of up to $50,000 a day and its members up to $5,000 a day.

Robin Hood management told the court that the strike had cost the company $1.7 million and that perishable raw materials and finished products worth a further $1.8 million were in danger of decay and contamination.

The three companies are to appear in court next week seeking permanent injunctions.

Meanwhile, a fourth company, Phoenix Mills Ltd., is to petition for a temporary injunction against its 100 striking workers in Superior Court Wednesday.

Bread is available in Montreal despite the strike because flour has been imported from the United States and from neighboring provinces.

Houston chambers buzzing over sawmill

Hostile council blocks mayor

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist Reporter

Basil Studer is a man with a problem.

He's mayor of Houston, B.C., a town of 2,500 people between Prince George and Prince Rupert.

Studer's problem isn't so much that he's mayor of a small community which is struggling for financial survival much like any other B.C. municipality.

His trouble is that he's facing a six-member council which is hostile toward him and his plan. What's more, the town hall staff refuses to give him a key to his office, and he's being denied access to municipal files. When Studer had to go to Victoria on municipal business, his council refused to pick up the tab and told him if he wanted to go he should do so as a private citizen.

Studer said in an interview in Victoria Monday that he had no idea what he was letting himself in for when he decided to run for mayor of Houston in last November's municipal election.

His reason for running was a proposal to lift 304 acres of farmland from the agricultural reserve to accommodate a sawmill, half a mile from the centre of town.

"Categorically opposed" was his campaign slogan and when the results were in, Studer had beaten his opponent two to one. He's serving the unexpired portion of the former mayor, Jack Kempf, now Social Credit MLA for Omineca.

Studer's troubles began the moment he was elected. Kempf, who would officially still be mayor until Dec. 31, called a meeting on Dec. 7, but Studer wasn't allowed to attend the in-camera session.

At that meeting, council talked to officials of Eurocan, the company which planned the sawmill and the B.C. Development Corporation, which was acting on Eurocan's behalf.

After that meeting, the council decided to support the company's application for removal of the 304 acres from the land reserve.

Studer's moment came Jan. 3, his first day in office. He informed council that he was intervening in the Dec. 7 decision and that the matter would be before council again at the next meeting.

Studer got trounced at a Jan. 18 council meeting. With

The two 747s both had the same original destination: Las Palmas, 65 miles from Tenerife. The flights were diverted to Tenerife by the terrorist bomb explosion in the Las Palmas airport terminal, and the pilots were preparing to depart on the final leg of their journey to Grand Canary Island when disaster struck.

Among the survivors was Capt. Victor S. Grubbs of Centreport, N.Y., pilot of the Pan Am plane.

Cifra quoted him as blaming ground fog for the collision: "We did not see anything until it happened."

A 41-member team of the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board arrived to help Spanish authorities in the investigation.

Three American pathologists left Monday to join the investigation, and eight officials came from the U.S. embassy in Madrid to aid survivors and handle the personal affairs of the dead.

conference it was clear the Pan Am plane had turned into the path of the Dutch plane but he questioned whether the KLM plane's takeoff was authorized,

"The key point is whether the KLM crew had been given order to take off," he said.

Ovarzabal said that in the last minutes before the disaster the control tower told the KLM 747 to go to the head of the runway and ordered the Pan Am 747 to taxi to a standby position.

The black flight-recorder boxes of the two planes — both found in the charred rubble spread over a 200-yard stretch of the runway and tapes of the conversations between the control tower and the pilots will be used in the investigation, he said.

Miffed by assertions that a misunderstanding caused the collision, the Spanish air ministry issued a statement absolving the control tower of any responsibility.

"Any type of sabotage or the failure in the communications of the control tower or its personnel can be discounted," the ministry communique said.

The newspaper Informaciones said Tenerife's Los Rodeos airport — site of six accidents involving fatalities since 1965 — was dangerous and had been built and operated against better advice.

The airport is situated on a 2,000-foot high plateau and clouds often roll in from the sea, blanketing the runway.

"A disaster that could be seen coming," the newspaper Diario 16 headlined an editorial.

For the past eight months, Spanish air controllers have been on a work-to-rule slowdown claiming they were too few and had to work too many hours with outdated equipment.

Survivors said the KLM jet struck the Pan Am jet broadside, just aft of the first-class section. Momentum carried the huge plane — fully loaded 747s weigh more than 200 tons — right through the American jet and several hundred more yards down the runway.

Crash is nightmare for insurance firms

LOS ANGELES — What will it cost, the collision of two jet airliners on an airport runway in the Canary Islands? How do you put a price on a human life?

Insurance officials in New York and London estimate that the insurance and liability bill could amount to at least $200 million, possibly much more.

The two Boeing 747s were insured for $25 million to $50 million each, and claims filed by relatives of the victims could range from $100 million to more than twice that figure.

Death claims are expected to be paid promptly, along with claims for the two planes, but lawsuits to fix responsibility for the disaster could take years to settle.

Attorneys for both sides will haggle privately over what a deceased's future earning power would have been, projected rates of inflation, the cost of supporting surviving family members and a "bonus" for the loss of the deceased's "projection, comfort and society."

There are indications that the legal morass expected to be caused by this latest disaster could be responsible for a rewriting and re-interpretation of critical elements of aviation law.

Among issues will be whether the Warsaw Convention limit of $75,000 for each air crash victim applies, whether families of the Pan Am dead can sue KLM for damages or vice-versa, and what liability, if any, applies to Boeing Aircraft Corp.

Watching and eating

Sports blamed for fat girls

OTTAWA (CP) — Professional sport is probably one of the major causes of obesity, especially among girls, Conservative MP Paul Yewchuk told the Commons Monday.

One reason he cited was Canadians' "habitual practice of sitting and watching professional sport on television or at a stadium while smoking heavily or consuming large quantities of high-calorie junk foods and alcoholic beverages."

Girls were the worst victims, he said, because "the exercise programs they are exposed to are geared to developing a few elite athletes, especially male athletes."

Yewchuk, a medical doctor, noted that professional sport was almost exclusively the preserve of males and 78 per cent of Canadian girls might become obese before they finished high school.

His statements were a preface to questions posed to Sport Minister Iona Campagnolo, who told the Commons Friday that professional sports served as an example to people like MPs who had "spectator sport" jobs.

Campagnolo said she had not ordered any studies into the effects of professional sport on the general health of Canadians. She invited Yewchuk to join her in "an anti-obesity campaign at some time in the future." Yewchuk is not fat.

The minister also defended her department's spending on amateur sport and recreation programs after Yewchuk said they were undermined by government spending on "elite international sport competitions and elaborate coach-training schemes."

Leaking gas kills workers

CHICAGO (UPI) — Deadly carbon monixide gas leaking from a blast furnace at a South Side steel mill killed four workers and injured six others Monday night, police said.

Firemen answering a report of an explosion at the Wisconsin Steel Co. plant on the city's South Side found 10 workers overcome by the noxious gas in the blast furnace area of the mill.

No-hassle talk wasn't promise

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau's recent statement that a person who smoked a joint of marijuana for personal pleasure should not be hassled did not mean the government intended to legalize the drug, Justice Minister Ron Basford said in the Commons Monday.

Basford told Dan McKenzie (PC — Winnipeg South centre) that he, Health Minister Marc Lalonde and Solicitor-General Francis Fox were deciding whether to reintroduce a Senate bill to lighten marijuana possession penalties, which died two years ago, or to draft new legislation.

The Senate bill proposed moving marijuana and hashish (cannabis) offences from the Narcotics Control Act to the less harsh Food and Drug Act.

The federal government promised to lighten penalties for possession of marijuana almost five years ago. Since then 100,000 people have been convicted of the criminal offence and 3,000 of them — most between the ages of 18 and 29 — have gone to prison.

Francisco court. She faces the same charge here as Conley.

Conley, who chose trial by judge, told the court she did not know Hanoum was planning to kidnap a baby Sept. 7, but she told Conley she was buying a black market baby.

Selbie said he was not saying he necessarily believed Conley's story, but there was not sufficient evidence to convict her.

Conley told the court that Hanoum had married at 13 and bore three children by age 16, but now is unable to have any more.

She said Hanoum had not seen her children since Christmas, 1973, when her husband left with them.

Gayle Patricia Green, the infant's mother, testified she saw Hanoum once in Vancouver General Hospital, where Conley and Hanoum worked under fictitious names, speaking to another woman in the maternity ward.

Green said Hanoum visited her Surrey home Sept. 7 and the woman grabbed her from behind and tied her hands with rope and later bound her to a bed.

She said Hanoum put baby clothes in a bag, placed Cameron in a shopping bag and fled.

Pornography definition is federal

The Criminal Code of Canada will continue to provide the definition of pornography, Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Monday.

He made the statement in answer to requests from regional court prosecutors in Vancouver, who have asked for a clear-cut policy on what is and what is not acceptable in B.C.

The Criminal Code states that offences tending to corrupt morals "include the undue exploitation of sex and sex with cruelty and violence," Gardom said, "and that is the only method of enforcement" except where municipalities decide to withdraw the business licences of retailers selling what council regards as pornographic material.

In Vancouver, Mayor Jack Volrich has threatened to withdraw business licences of those who defy his order to remove "dirty" books from display racks.

Mexicans riot over bus fares

NEZAHUALCOYOTL, Mexico (UPI) — Authorities in this slum suburb outside Mexico City called out the police to put down a protest by angry residents who seized more than 200 urban buses in protest of unauthorized fare increases.

Most of the vehicles were seized during a Sunday demonstration march of 20,000 persons — including housewives and children — to the town's municipal buildings.

ularly in Quebec and Eastern Canada."

Although used rarely in the past, closure already has been used twice during this session of Parliament to force passage of contentious bills.

Debate was restricted on a bill to change the federal government's 50-50 cost-sharing arrangements with the provinces on medical care, hospital insurance and post-secondary education.

It also was used to end debate on a bill that increased the amounts that could be bought under the Registered Retirement Savings Plan and still be tax deductible.

With the number of jobless at the highest level since the Depression, MPs from the hardest-hit areas have called on the government to ease up on its restrictions.

Critics of the bill say some persons have difficulty finding even the eight weeks of work now required to qualify for benefits.

Cullen said those points can be considered when the bill goes to the clause study. Amendments can be introduced at that stage of Parliamentary consideration.

He told reporters that closure should be used more often to cut debate on bills the government is trying to get through the House.

He said Newfoundland MP John Crosbie (PC — St. John's East) had threatened to filibuster — speak as long as he could — to delay passage of the bill.

Crosbie said in an interview he hasn't yet had a chance to speak on the unemployment insurance bill.

He said 25 per cent of the work force in his riding is unemployed and "it is a miracle for most of them to get even eight weeks of work."

Mail workers end walkout

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Inside workers at the main post office returned to work Sunday and began sorting a backlog of mail accumulated during a six-day walkout.

The 120 workers, members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, left their jobs last Monday to protest shift changes for six workers. Union officials said the changes were contrary to contract provisions.

one abstention, his council voted against him and upheld the Dec. 7 decision to support removal of the land from the reserve.

Meanwhile, Studer didn't remain idle. He informed the B.C. Land Commission of his opposition to the proposed removal of the land from the reserve and urged that a public hearing be held in Houston.

That hearing took place on March 8 and Studer has been informed that the land commission ruled against location of the mill on the proposed agricultural site.

It was a victory for Studer, but he said he never opposed the sawmill as such.

"There are other, better sites, and we want the jobs for our town," he said.

According to Eurocan, the mill would employ 350 people and put $300,000 a year into Houston's municipal treasury.

Studer was in Victoria to meet a number of cabinet ministers and he asked Kempf to help him set up the meetings.

"He was very polite and promised to help me," Studer said.

He also said Kempf hadn't been quite truthful with the B.C. Legislature when he said during the question period on March 3 that he didn't want to influence the land commission one way or the other with regard to the sawmill issue.

At the hearing, according to Studer, Kempf spoke at length in favor of the proposed sawmill and removal of the acreage from the land reserve.

Studer said he hoped to get some support from cabinet ministers. He also hopes that all meetings can be arranged soon, because he's paying for the trip and the stay out of his own pocket.

All in all, he says, he has had a frustrating three months in office, and if it weren't for his job as a high school teacher in Houston, and the support of his family, he might have thrown in the towel.

"But I'll hang in there, no matter what they throw in my way," he said defiantly.

Your Good Health

Dear Dr. Thosteson: What causes fluid in the legs, the kind that makes them swell up and ache? — MRS. J.B.

Poor leg vein circulation is the immediate cause, and that's often a symptom of over-all sluggish circulation. Leg veins, because of their distance from the heart (where vein blood is being pumped), have to work against greater odds, even with the best functioning system. When anything interferes with general circulation the leg vessels are often the first to react.

One effect of this is a reduced ability to remove excess fluid from the cells and tissues. It may collect locally and cause the swellings. The condition is called "edema" (e-DEE-mah).

Heart failure can produce edema, as can a disorder of the liver or kidneys. In some cases, chiefly among younger persons, a diet without sufficient protein may cause it. Protein helps maintain the proper pressure between the tissues and the blood vessels. This is important in carrying away excess fluid.

Leg swellings, therefore, are important symptoms and should be reported. Prompt diagnosis and treatment may forestall more serious problems later on. The leg aches with edema are usually a matter of the muscles "complaining" of insufficient nourishment, a result of the poor circulation.

Carter policies shake Latins

By GARRY FAIRBAIRN

WASHINGTON (CP) — The paradoxical policies of Jimmy Carter toward Latin America are causing consternation in capitals throughout the hemisphere.

The shock effect of the U.S. human rights offensive and other actions has been magnified by the initial optimism with which Carter's election was greeted.

Many of his principles, in fact, should still be beneficial to Latin America: a commitment to greater international development efforts; emphasis on the role of international financial bodies that have already done much for the area; and acceptance of the concept of agreements to stabilize commodity prices.

The Spanish-speaking carter has also expressed sympathy for Latin aspirations and promised greater consultation with traditional U.S. allies.

Yet Latin American countries now are faced with the sight of emerging U.S.-Cuban detente while the United States is continuing its verbal attacks on former friends. One exception to the general disillusionment is Mexico, whose new president appears to have established as good a personal relationship with Carter as Prime Minister Trudeau has.

But U.S. aid to Argentina and Uruguay was cut because of human rights violations; U.S. criticism on the same topic prompted those countries, plus Brazil, Guatemala and El Salvador, to renounce future U.S. military aid.

Brazil has also been irked by U.S. attempts to stop their purchase of a West German nuclear plant. The United States is blocking sale of Israeli planes to Ecuador and U.S. tariff actions may affect several countries.

For such reasons, Latin American leaders are concentrating elsewhere while the rest of the world watches State Secretary Cyrus Vance's visit to Moscow.

The Latin leaders are focussing on a much more junior official, Patricia Derian, Carter's choice as human rights co-ordinator in the state department.

Although her appointment has not yet been formally confirmed, Derian's trip to Argentina is seen by observers as significant because it is the new administration's first Latin American venture.

The Derian visit might bring more U.S. condemnation of the torture of political prisoners in Argentina; or it might be interpreted by U.S. financiers as a quiet signal that they can proceed with investments which that inflation-wracked country badly needs.

In the subtle worlds of diplomacy and finance, impressions left by such comparatively unpublicized trips may be sharply different from impressions conveyed through public statements.

As more official visits are made, Latin leaders will be able to get a clearer picture of U.S. government intentions.

They are hoping they will find that Carter's declarations are in effect only for public consumption and that behind-the scenes aid and investment will continue as usual.

Their fear, however, is that he means what he says.

$7 million crash study

Arctic oil mopup mapped

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Service announced Monday it will undertake a five-year, $7 million program to develop oil spill countermeasures for Arctic waters.

The need for countermeasures for ice-infested waters is urgent because of the rising threat of major spills due to increasing oil exploration in the Arctic, said Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc.

The EPS study is aimed at developing a comprehensive contingency plan for oil spills in the Arctic, supported by effective control and cleanup equipment and techniques.

The program will consist of studies of the physical behavior and effects of oil blowouts and the movement of oil spills in Arctic ice-infested and ice-covered waters.

Research will be conducted also into the effects of oil spills on Arctic shorelines, cleanup techniques, remote sensing systems, containment and disposal equipment and other necessary countermeasure tools and methods.

The EPS said the requirement for such a program became evident last year when a study of oil exploration in the Beaufort Sea showed there were "serious inadequacies" in control and cleanup capabilities for a well blowout or other large oil spill.

Trade hit in U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. registered a record trade deficit for the second straight month in February as imports exceeded exports by $1.87 billion, the commerce department said Monday.

Exports last month totalled $9.8 billion, up two per cent from January's depressed level. But imports were valued at $11.67 billion, the highest amount of foreign goods ever purchased in one month by the United States.

The previous largest trade deficit — $1.67 billion — was in January, when the nation was suffering from the effects of severe cold weather, causing plant shutdowns and transportation problems.

The U.S. had recorded trade deficits every month since May, 1976, the commerce department said. February was the third successive month that imports have exceeded $11 billion.

Until January, the main reason for the deficits was a relatively quick recovery of the U.S. economy from recession compared to its trading partners. That increased demand for foreign goods in this country faster than demand for U.S. exports picked up.

Rejected rebels face death

BANGKOK (AP) — Five leaders of an unsuccessful right-wing coup attempt in Thailand were refused refuge by other Asian countries and will be tried and possibly executed, the military-backed government said Sunday.

Thai officials said they had unsuccessfully asked Taiwan and several other unidentified Asian countries to grant entry to former general Chalard Hiranyasiri; his son, Maj. Uswin Hiranyasiri, and three other army officers held as leaders of the Saturday plot.

Defence Minister Sangad Chalawyu said a joint police and military inquiry will take place as soon as possible. He described the five as "rebels" who might be sentenced to death, but he did not specify what charges they would face.

The five rebels were to have left Thailand on Saturday night for Taipei and the government had even announced their departure. But Taiwan refused them, one Nationalist Chinese diplomat saying it was unfair for Thailand "to throw their hot potatoes to Taiwan."

Prime Minister Tanin Kraivixien, leader of the conservative regime which replaced a three-year-old civilian government after a military coup last Oct. 6, said in a television address that "the country has returned to normal."

One loyalist general and his aide were reported killed in the coup attempt, when 300 soldiers moved into Bangkok from the provinces and seized four key government and military installations.

The government quickly surrounded what it called the "misled" troops and won their surrender without violence. It said the rank-and-file rebels would be dealt with leniently.

Bomb explosion hits airlines

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — A bomb exploded in a 20-storey apartment buildings, destroying the interior of two airline offices on the ground floor.

Police said the bomb was planted near Venezuela's Viasa Airlines office and the adjacent office of Mexican Airlines in the Miramar Plaza building.

Police close LSD net

Colonist News Services

LONDON — British police arrested 100 people at the weekend in a national swoop, breaking what a spokesman said was a world-scale LSD manufacturing ring.

Police superintendent Beston Wakely, deputy commander of the roundup, said most of those in the ring had been arrested but the drive against those "on the periphery" could be expected to continue.

The dragnet, the biggest drug swoop in Britain, began early Saturday to smash what officers described as a major underworld operation that has manufactured and smuggled abroad LSD worth millions of dollars since 1970.

They said much of the LSD was sent to the United States, Europe and Australia.

The targets Saturday were a dozen LSD factories all over the country and the homes of leading figures in the dope ring that is considered responsible for most of the hallucinogens distributed in Britain, police sources reported.

Sources said the drugs seized in the raids included LSD with a street value of more than $425,000.

More than 800 officers — some of them armed — from 16 police forces took part in the sweep that stretched from Strathclyde, the urban sprawl around Glasgow, to remote hillside farms in the Welsh mountains.

India's rift resolved

NEW DELHI (AP) — India's new rulers patched up internal differences Sunday and agreed to form a cabinet composed of the two leading parties that ousted Indira Gandhi at the polls.

Jagjivan Ram, 68, head of the 85-million-strong Untouchable caste, was named defence minister in the government of 81-year-old Prime Minister Morarji Desai.

Ram, one of four holdouts who boycotted swearing-in ceremonies for the new government Saturday, said he would join Desai in working for a "new India." A spokesman for Desai's Janata Peoples' party, the largest bloc in the ruling alliance, said the four would be sworn in today.

The presidential palace had announced Friday night that Ram, Desai's chief rival for the prime ministership, would be a senior minister in the new government.

But Ram and the three other leaders of the alliance — H. N. Bahuguna, George Fernandes and Raj Narain — failed to appear at the installation ceremony the following day, threatening a major rift in the new leadership.

A government spokesman said Bahuguna will become chemicals and fertilizer minister, Fernandes will serve as communications minister, and Narain, who defeated Mrs. Gandhi in her home constuituency, will be minister for health and family planning.

PONTIAC CHALLENGED THE COMPETITION. AND WON!

Pontiac's coast-to-coast sales of full-size cars are up 17.9% making Pontiac number one in increase of sales in the regular group and considerably ahead of the runner-up.*

While some of Pontiac's full-size competitors settled for a minor face lift this year, Pontiac came out with completely re-engineered and re-designed cars for a changing world.

Cars with more room overall for heads and hats. More room in the back for legs and feet.

And bigger trunks for the many things six people want to take with them.

New Pontiacs are exactly that. New.

They're quiet. Smooth. Easy to handle around town. They take up less space on the road and in the garage. In fact, '77 Pontiacs have a turning diameter, curb to curb, about five feet shorter than some of their smaller-inside, bulkier-outside competitors.

That says something for Pontiac's potential for maneuverability.

Some other Pontiac changes are less obvious.

These are the best-protected full-size Pontiacs ever to face up to the corrosion hazards of a Canadian winter.

These Pontiacs simplify servicing, with a new electrical diagnostic connector that allows for up to 45 quick checks and tests.

And, for a world demanding better use of its resources, especially energy, these Pontiacs are fuel-efficient.

Gas economy estimates for a '77 Parisienne with the new available 305-cubic-inch, 2-bbl. V8 and automatic transmission are 28 miles per gallon in highway tests and 20 miles per gallon in city tests, based on Transport Canada approved test methods.

Pontiac...the Mileage Maker.

From the beginning of the 1977 model year, Pontiac has challenged the competition with revolutionary, evolutionary automobiles.

And Pontiac has won. Just look at its increase in sales!

If you like full-size cars, you're sure to like a test drive in a new Parisienne, Catalina or Laurentian. See your Pontiac dealer this week.

Man on a mission

IN SPITE OF the furious reaction of Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet Union Communist Party's general secretary, President Jimmy Carter of the United States is determined to pursue his human rights policy.

Mr. Brezhnev has warned the American president that his comments on the Kremlin's internal policies are offensive and could have, indeed would have, "an unthinkable" effect on detente.

In what observers call his toughest rebuke to the United States since the diplomatically cool days of the Vietnam war, Mr. Brezhnev said he would never accept "Washington's claims to teach others how to live." The Soviet Union, he warned, would continue to discipline dissidents.

"We will not tolerate interference . . . by anyone under any pretext," Mr. Brezhnev stormed.

Communist parties of the Communist bloc have hurried into line to support the Soviet leader. They have started a propaganda campaign to counter the Carter human rights program, seeking to discredit the American president in his posture as a humanist.

They are spreading, through the media they control, a deliberately distorted story supplied by Tass, official Soviet news service, about the imprisonment of the Rev. Ben Chavis, one of 10 persons imprisoned during the racial disturbances of 1971 in a riotous incident.

The Tass story quoted Mr. Chavis as complaining that he and nine friends had been imprisoned "for our political activities, because we fought against racism in America." His appeal to the president had been ignored, Tass said.

"And not a word of this has appeared in the American bourgeois press which reports in lurid detail every belch by a dissident in the Socialist countries," Tass rather crudely commented.

Tass, however, makes no mention of the fact that Mr. Chavis and his friends were charged and convicted after they had set fire to a grocery store and assaulted firemen who attempted to quench the flames.

The official Czechoslovakian Communist Party newspaper, Rude Pravo, to give another example, has accused the West of encouraging dissidents in the Communist world with the hope of "covering up the fact that it is the capitalist states which are shamelessly trampling upon human rights."

People in the democratic lands should not discount the effect of this sort of propaganda, nor should they make any mistake about the intentions of those who broadcast it.

It appears to be a deliberate plan to create an atmosphere in which it would be excusable to delay further talks on a new Strategic Arms Limitation Agreement.

It may be recalled that in his inaugural address to the Congress, President Carter placed special emphasis on the necessity for resumption of such negotiations.

"We will move this year," he said, "towards our ultimate goal: the elimination of all nuclear weapons from this earth."

It may be a wildly optimistic aspiration given the warmest collaboration of the Soviet Union. But in the current circumstances, unless the climate improves, it appears pretty hopeless for achievement of even a first step.

This is the more disturbing since the original strategic arms limitation agreement expires in October.

Much will depend upon the diplomacy, patience and persuasiveness that Cyrus Vance, the new American secretary of state, brings to the meeting with the Kremlin leaders in Moscow during the next few days.

He has made a sensible decision in the beginning: he declined to accept an invitation to a meeting with Soviet dissidents on his arrival. Obviously, however much he would have wished to hear the stories the disenchanted Russians had to tell him, such a contact was impossible.

It would have been seen as a deliberate affront to his hosts and he would have found it a waste of time to present President Carter's arms control proposals — even if he had been allowed to do so.

Mr. Vance is no novice, of course. He was one of the late President Lyndon Johnson's trouble-shooters, a special envoy to the international conference on the Cyprus crisis of 1967, and the Korean difficulties the following year. He was a negotiator in the abortive Paris talks on the Vietnam impasse of 1968-69. He was deputy secretary of defence from 1964 to 1967, and for four years from 1962 secretary of the army.

He would seem to be well equipped for his mission to Moscow.

He will need to be.

The Soviet Union's indignation at President Carter's outspoken defence of the dissidents and his declaration of support for human rights everywhere must be in some measure assuaged or Mr. Vance's effort to find a new formula for weapons control could, for the moment, be wasted.

Mr. Brezhnev and his associates, however, must eventually appreciate that, President Carter's well-intentioned human rights stance notwithstanding, strategic arms control is as important to them as to the United States and the rest of the world.

Without it, mankind becomes the most endangered species — if it has not become already.

Third World apologist

By RICHARD JACKSON

Remember when Newfoundland's Donald Campbell Jamieson, Liberal MP for Burin-Burgeo, was, in turn, minister of defence production, of transport, of regional and economic expansion, and of industry, trade and commerce?

Plain-spoken, straightforward.

Forthcoming, he was a favorite — if not THE favorite — of the press.

Giving clear answers even to hard questions, he was respected — even esteemed — by the Commons, including its Opposition members.

He was still essentially the same basic Don Jamieson some of the Press Gallery veterans recall in his pre-politician days as a broadcaster.

Some can remember him sitting just a bit off-stage at Hamilton's Capitol Theatre, covering — live to Newfoundland — then Liberal Opposition Leader Lester Pearson's Ontario campaign speeches.

★ ★ ★

Smooth talker then.

Smooth talker in those first cabinet portfolios.

Smooth and straight down the line.

And then something happened to the basic Don Jamieson.

He became Secretary of State for External Affairs.

And became a latter-day Paul Martin.

Still smooth, but not exactly straight down the line any more.

Instead, beating all about the mulberry bush.

Equivocal, ambiguous, sophistical.

Securely hedged with qualifying ifs, ands, buts, howevers, and on-the-one-hand-and-on-the-other.

Obfuscation the result if not altogether the objective.

Now, as ever, external affairs is a big-spending, high-living, special-privilege department apart and different from all the others.

If it has any friends among the taxpayers, it will be pleasantly surprised.

It doesn't even have many friends abroad where it should be beloved — but isn't — for the $1,000 million it annually lavishes upon the usually envious, customarily left-leaning and habitually hostile Third World.

So in that sort of cold and lonely climate, the minister fronting for it serves best who bewilders most.

Like the other day when he tried to rationalize the "reverse discrimination" his department practises in dealing with white and black Africa.

Almost all the Western World — save, it appears, for Canada — regards Uganda's self-styled Field Marshal Idi Dada Amin as a bloody butcher.

British Prime Minister James Callaghan came to Ottawa for the purpose, just the other day, of among other things, publicly expressing his contempt for the "despicable Mr. Amin" and proclaiming how "utterly unwelcome" this murderous clown would be in Britain either at the Commonwealth Conference or the Queen's jubilee celebrations.

Mr. Callaghan "hoped and trusted" that the Commonwealth would "deal quickly and appropriately" with the "Madman of Africa."

So how does Donald Jamieson, speaking for external affairs, feel about it?

"Are you in favor," he was asked straight out, "of expelling Uganda from the Commonwealth?"

He took a convoluted 183 words for his reply, all of them coming out, when sifted, to a tortured no.

Then if he didn't think expulsion of Uganda was justified, how did he rationalize the exile of South Africa a few years ago from the Commonwealth?

That was "different," he dissembled, arguing that the dictator Amin lacked "popular support" in Uganda while the Sough African government enjoyed elective office.

Untrue, he was corrected: the black Ugandans heartily supported the expulsion of its thousands of Asians, many of whom swarmed as refugees to Canada.

Wasn't the real reason, he was asked, that Amin was black and the government was afraid of a black Africa boycott?

★ ★ ★

Don Jamieson poo-pooed it, but the suspicion remains that this is the nub of it.

Canada practises the policy of boycott against white Africa, supports black guerrilla terrorists and hands out $1 billion in foreign aid, much of it with "no strings," unlike some other Western nations which require the money to be spent with them.

Don Jamieson, except that he is wider and thicker, is no different than his predecessors Allan MacEachen, Mitchell Sharp and Paul Martin, as a Third World apologist.

Panic-buying in Britain

Why tea prices are soaring

By JEREMY BUGLER, the London Observer

British housewives are panic-buying tea in supermarkets and groceries all over the country, as tea prices at the London auction recently reached a record average of $2 a pound.

Now Labor members of Parliament are demanding an investigation into what one of them, William Hamiltoon, calls "blatant gambling now going on in the tea market."

Tea has trebled in price at the London auction in a year and nearly doubled in two months. For the British, even the thought that their cups of tea could be priced beyond their pockets is a considerable blow. Tea is the fluid on which the British empire floated. Doctor Johnson "swallowed his tea in oceans."

Whenever the British face a crisis they drink a cup of tea. Their ill-fated expeditionary force came back from Dunkirk in 1940 to floods of tea. The Battle of Britain was won by Spitfire pilots fuelled by tea.

As Anthony Burgess, author of "Clockwork Orange," once put it, "The best thing to do, when you've got a dead boy, and your husband's on the kitchen floor and you don't know what to do about it, is to make yourself a good strong cup of tea."

★ ★ ★

Some British writers have even seen in the English addiction to tea a subtle conspiracy by foreigners. "Our trouble is that we drink too much tea," said J. B. Priestley. "I see in this the slow revenge of the Orient, which has diverted the Yellow River down our throats."

"Don't worry. Wood is a renewable resource."

London tea brokers dismiss charges that wholesale speculation has been forcing up tea prices. Unlike cocoa or coffee, there is no "futures" market in tea — people cannot buy tea "on the slate" in advance of delivery.

★ ★ ★

"This makes speculation much harder" says Peter Banyard, new chairman of the Tea Brokers' Association.

"Some dealers may have been gambling by buying tea in the country of origin but it will have made very little difference." What has happend, he said, is that the whole world now wants a cup of tea. Americans are buying more tea as they have boycotted or switched from highly expensive coffee. Arabs in the Middle East are buying more tea. Most unexpectedly, Indian demand for tea (their own tea) has risen considerably with the economic recovery in that country.

"Tea growers just haven't been able to keep pace with demand," says Brooke Bond Liebig, one of the world's biggest tea companies. Drought in the tea-producing countries of East Africa and Sri Lanka have meant only average crops.

Tea interests are now becoming anxious to assure British housewives what good value their cup of tea still is. Currently, they say, a well-made cup of tea costs less than one-sixth that of a cup of instant coffee. They are advising tea drinkers not to hoard, as tea can taint easily.

"For years tea has suffered from being too cheap" say Brooke Bond Liebig. "The price of tea on the London auction actually didn't move at all in the years between 1957 and 1970."

The firm points out that tea on most of the world auctions is around the same price as in London today — or even higher, as at a recent Mombasa, Kenya, tea auction.

The hope for tea drinkers of the world now rests on good harvests in East Africa and Sri Lanka.

Early reports from the tea gardens are promising and if crops are good, say London brokers, then prices will stabilize.

Could they come down? "I am afraid not" said one broker. "Prices are the exception to the rule that what goes up must come down."

Cubism

From The Globe and Mail

While it may sound like one of the ingredients of a nuclear reactor, UC-82 is essentially a work of Mother Nature with some man-made modifications a square tomato. Well, not quite square as an ice-cube is square, but with the corners rounded — a shape that helps it survive the bruising of mechanical harvesting and transport. In reduced transit waste alone, it is estimated that the new shape will save California farmers about $20-million a year. (In square figures.)

This is regarded as the greatest development in tomato gives us a better California researchers bred a new variety with a tough skin. Although this cut down on losses by the farmers, it produced a tomato on which knives tended to skid rather than cut. Now the arrival of the square tomato gives us a better chance of cutting a decent slice for the sandwich.

We also have a better chance of fitting the slices neatly together on the sandwich. The old round slices, without clumsy overlapping, left awkward spaces. The same could be said of egg slices, but the development of square eggs is something that, in all fairness, should be discussed with the chickens.

Espionage cover-up by progressives

By PETER WORTHINGTON from Toronto

When a car-bomb exploded in Washington last September, killing Orlando Letelier, a former minister in the government of Chile's late Salvador Allende, there was outrage. Mostly rightwing groups were blamed. Or, by innuendo, the secret police of the Chilean military junta. It was widely noted in the media that Letelier was a tireless worker for Chilean human rights and fighter for the restoration of democracy.

His death was cited as another example of the wickedness of the Chilean dictatorship. And so the matter rested, with considerable propaganda being generated but no arrests made or clues forthcoming. Another tragic victim of counter-revolution; a martyr for human rights.

★ ★ ★

Then in December investigative columnist Jack Anderson revealed that the contents of the murdered Letelier's briefcase had produced disquieting evidence linking him with Communist espionage; that he was receiving $1,000 a month and other payments from Cuba to further his "work." Included were names of Cubans and Soviets in America who are known to be espionage officers; plus information that Letelier was developing close contacts with "liberals and progressives" in the U.S. administration (and even paying some of them), to oppose Chile and help the Marxist cause.

Despite the Anderson disclosures, no newspaper or news agency followed up the story. Then in mid-February syndicated columnists Rowland Evans and Robert Novak revealed more of the contents of the Letelier briefcase — putting him deeper and deeper into the Soviet-Cuban espionage network. Still the media largely maintained silence — no interest from the "heavies" like the Washington Post, Star, or New York Times.

By any fair standards, the oversight is a condemnation of Western media. Maybe not sinister, but certainly sloppy. They didn't want to do anything to shake the conventional, agreed-upon interpretation of a martyr's demise.

Among the contents of the briefcase:

- Letelier was the director of something called the Transnational Institute which is linked to the Washington-based Institute of Policy Studies. IPS is an influential radical "think-tank" which has been described as "the link between the respectable and revolutionary left." IPS also has links with the Organizing Committee for the Fifth Estate (OC-5), which specializes in exposing Western intelligence operations and involves CIA-defector Philip Agee whom Britain is trying to deport because of his contacts with Soviet and Cuban intelligence. It now seems Letelier's Transnational Institute had direct ties with Communist Intelligence.
- The briefcase contained two letters to Letelier from the late Allende's daughter, who lives in Cuba and is married to Luis Fernandez de Ona, a senior officer in DGI (Cuban Intelligence), who was a comrade of Che Guevera and involved in subversion in Latin America.
- Her letter mentions money enclosed ($1,000 and $5,000) to enable Letelier to "continue your work." A second letter (Aug. 1976) mentioned problems in transporting documents and suggested the best way was through "comrades of the U.S.S.R. and East Germany."
- There was a letter from Sol Landau, an IPS colleague, who stated that he intended to devote future activities to "Making propaganda for American socialism . . ." (After Letelier's murder, a 700-word piece by Landau appeared in the Washington Post.)
- The papers revealed that Chile's exiled Marxist leaders are getting considerable financing from East Germany (through UN contacts). Letelier also had connections with the Victor Degtyar, a KGB officer who doubles as third secretary at the Soviet embassy.
- Letelier had developed contacts among Western liberals (especially members of the church committee investigating security), and was a lobbyist for the movement to cut off sales of arms and supplies to Chile.
- Letters show Democratic Congressman Michael Harrington apparently received $174 in 1975 to fly to Mexico and another $380 in expenses which came from Helsinki.
- A letter by Letelier to Beatrice Allende a year ago says in part: "The object is to mobilize the 'liberals' and other persons who if they don't identify with us from an ideological point of view, are in it for what human rights reflects . . . You know how these Liberals are. It's possible that one of the sponsoring congressmen might fear that they might be connected with Cuba, etc., and eventually give his support to the committee." He added: "Perhaps some day, not far away, we also will be able to do what has been done in Cuba."

In fact everything reveals a large, international network of human rights and progressive organizations dedicated not to the slogans espoused, but the destruction and subjugation of human rights. Evans and Novak noted that Letelier was, in reality, manipulating "idealistic, liberal congressmen" while concealing the fact that there was "world Communist support for his movement."

If, as a result of his ugly murder, a sharper look is taken at the activities associated with the Institute of Policy Studies and affiliates, it may well be that Letelier's unseemly death will not have been useless. It will have been the ironic purpose of altering those who it was his declared intent to destroy. Paradoxical, perhaps, but that's reality . . .

Optimism replaces gloom widespread among bankers on the continent in 1976

In Rome, an aging Communist figure gives a visitor a sly grin and introduces him to Giorgio Amendola, one of his party's longtime leaders. "I want you to meet this country's leading Social Democrat," he says.

Listen to Amendola for nearly an hour and you could almost imagine him running on the Republican ticket against Jimmy Carter.

Across the city, Mario Dido, an economist for the Communist trade union, declares, "The redistribution of wealth here has gone as far as it can safely go. Now we're trying to increase over-all employment, not wage rates." As a step in that direction, the union recently agreed to forego seven annual paid holidays.

The Italian Communists may be straining to sound moderate, but all across Europe the same theme is heard.

In Britain, strike activity was halved two years ago and halved again last year. In France, even amid a rising vote for a Socialist-Communist alliance a relatively unknown prime minister gains popularity with a touchy austerity program. In West Germany, the government gets broad support for a tight spending policy despite rising unemployment.

"The drift to the left in Europe has been turned back," contends Hans Mast, chief economist for the massive Swiss Credit Bank on the busy Parade Platz in Zurich. "The consensus is all to contain social welfare, to ease its burden."

Considering this month's big Socialist-Communist gains in local French elections, Mast's assessment might be in some question there. Still, such optimism appears to be replacing some of the gloom that was widespread among bankers and businessmen on the continent last year.

That gloom translated itself into a substantial flow of capital out of Europe to the United States, some bankers say. It flowed in fear that continuing recession would lead to more power for leftist leaders in Europe, more nationalization of industry and further expansion of already massive social benefit systems.

That still could happen, particularly in France. And there are many who believe Europe will remain in the throes of economic stagnation for several years. But a cross section of government leaders, bankers, industrialists and even some trade unionists interviewed in five countries expressed more hope than fear about that outlook.

They see the non-Communist industrial countries in a difficult but predictable transition from rapid postWorld War II growth to a long period of more modest expansion. The complex reasons for this change relate to the high living standards already achieved, the demand for more leisure time and the slowdown in population growth.

"The mood of the business world is much worse than the situation justifies," said Otmar Emminger, vice president and shortly to become president of the Bundesbank in Fkrankfurt, West Germany's equivalent of the U.S. federal reserve system. A blunt-talking but less dramatic version of his American counterpart, Arthur Burns, Emminger added, "The fact recovery is modest gives me confidence it will go on a long time."

This transition to slower growth demands some adaptation by governments and citizens. And it is the evidence that some of this adjustment is beginning that is creating new optimism in Europe.

Mainly, there is pressure to restrain the growth of the costly social benefit systems that have transferred a substantial share of the fruits of the economic progress of the past 30 years to lower income groups.

There is a realization, even among union leaders and some leftist politicians, that, as Emminger put it: "We simply have overdone it." Much of the welfare system improvement was installed at a time when rapid growth was expected to provide the needed funds to support it." Now we must adjust to a more stable world."

As many experts see it, these programs have become a key element in inflation. They put pressure on government budgets and they threaten the competitiveness and profitability of private industry. At present, German employers pay an amount equal to 9 per cent of wages into Germany's version of social security, nearly twice what U.S. employers pay. In Italy the figure is more than 13 per cent and in Britain, more than 8 per cent.

That only begins to tell the story of the greater worker security. Employers seldom are free to furlough unneeded workers without tough negotiations and even then, political pressure sometimes is too great to permit it.

In Britain and Italy a threatened layoff, as often as not, has resulted in a government bailout to keep a plant going. This placed added burdens on the taxpayers and politicized the layoff quesiton all the more.

Recognizing this, both the British Labor government and the Italians, with the approval even of the Communist Party, are trying to hold government growth in check. They want private industry to become a bigger slice of the total national economic pie.

"We are in favor of expansion of private industry," stated one top Communist leader in his well-worn and barren Rome office. "State subsidized industries have become so huge they can no longer be effectively controlled."

To help private industry, the Italian trade unions have agreed to permit more flexible use of overtime and to reduce the sometimes huge retirement bonuses.

The British Labor government finally took hard line on British Leyland in recent weeks, threatening to withhold further funds from the government-controlled auto company unless workers ended a wildcat strike.

◆ ◆ ◆

Meantime, the transition to slower growth also intensifies the pressure on the developed nations to work out problems of the more backward countries, particularly hard hit by higher oil prices. Many European leaders see the so-called Third World as the place where potential for rapid economic growth still remains. Such growth would provide new markets for Western goods and thus contribute to worldwide prosperity.

There are many perilous turns along the road to achieving such prosperity, perilous enough to explain the gloom still emanating from some bankers and private industrialists. Here are some of them:

• Slow growth means high unemployment in most nations for several years at least. So far, this unemployment hasn't shaken popular support for wage restraint and other programs to contain government spending and inflation, which still averages close to 10 per cent across Europe. But protests could erupt, as indeed they have in recent weeks among university students in Italy facing the prospect of degrees but no jobs.

• Jobless protests could lead to a wave of protectionism as individual countries seek to preserve jobs in weak domestic industries. These pressures are evident in the United States as much as anywhere.

Almost all the leaders interviewed dread the impact of such actions. Protection might preserve some jobs today, but it would mean a severe shackling of international trade and would permit inefficent industries to plod along with less Competition, forcing consumers to pay higher prices.

• The Communist Party in Italy and the Socialist-Communist alliance in France could continue to gain strength. But more important, due to unrest on the left, both could turn out to be less moderate in their policies thasn they have sounded to date.

• Third World financial problems could grow, especially if no alternatives are found to the short-term credits being provided now both by private banks and international credit organizations.

◆ ◆ ◆

Because of such fears, an economist for the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the Paris-based economic secretariat established by the major industrilized nations, described Europe as "hanging on the edge" at the moment between more economic coprodination, both within the Common Market and with the rest of the world, or some kind of breakdown in such mutual efforts.

"I'm pretty gloomy for the next four or five years," agreed L. A. DicksMireaux, economic adviser for the Bank of England, where regally uniformed guards patrol the halls. International co-operation is going to be sorely tested."

On the other hand, he sees hope that the world economy will come through this period without major disaster "if people don't get too discouraged about unemployment."

All of this forms the backdrop for the coming summit talks in London in early May. And it explains why European leaders insist that the meetings must focus on more than narrow questions of how much strong nations might stimulate their economies to help the rest. Rather, they say, the focus should be on working out trade agreements that will head off protectionism and on formalizing a long-term program for financing oil deficits and the development of the Third World.

Restraint centres on costly growth of social system

Seal hunt nauseating

Maybe the term gentle is inappropriate in this letter as I am writing to protest in the strongest terms possible the inhuman, cruel and vicious seal hunts!

I was sickened to learn of this barbaric practice — having been under the illusion that we lived and visited among supposedly civilized people. How in the name of good conscience can you allow something like this to continue? You condone that which you allow.

My family has visited and enjoyed Canada up to now — but you may rest assured that neither I nor my family will make any more trips to Canada until your government publicly disavows this obscene practice.

I intend to do all I can to let others know of this situation so they too will avoid Canada or any other country permitting such cruelty. We have always loved animals and to see and hear what is, and has been going on is, to say the very least, nauseating!!

Trident

In mid-January a resolution was introduced in our legislature regarding the Trident nuclear submarine base, and regarding proliferation of nuclear weapons generally. As of March 14, this resolution has not received debate. It would be very useful at this time, for citizens in our province to write to their MLAs urging that a debate be scheduled soon, encouraging them to give their support to the resolution. It reads as follows.

". . . that this house expresses grave concern to the Canadian government at the continued construction and proliferation of nuclear missile bases in neighboring countries and other nations around the world, such as the Trident base in Bangor, Washington, and any Russian equivalent.

And that it is of continuing concern that not only the number of bases is increasing along with strike capability but the number of nations including those not necessarily regarded as major powers is now entering into this buildup;

And this house supports those people or organizations genuinely concerned with the proliferation of nuclear arms and bases threatening world peace."

The names and addresses of the members of the Legislature can be obtained upon request from the Speaker's Office, Room 253, in the Parliament Buildings. MLAs often take their cue from the public in these matters if they receive letters on the subject. In a democracy, citizens should inform themselves on key issues and inform their representatives of their wishes.

This resolution, if passed, would be a small but useful step in the struggle towards nuclear disarmament. It is appropriate to remember the saying, "the surest way for evil to triumph in the world, is for good men to do nothing." Elected representatives do heed letters from voters, so let's make our views known.

Quebec

Lately we have heard all too much about a separate Quebec, or a separate B.C. As soon as you buy twin beds the marriage is over. How can I tell you, my fellow Canadians that that is exactly what we are—Canadians. Have you no pride in that fact? Did our ancestors come here from Germany, England, France, Russia, Japan, China and hundreds of other countries for absolutely nothing? Did they not come for the freedom to make the life they live more productive of their own free will? All of these people came here to be Canadians, not French Canadians, not English Canadians, not Japanese Canadians, but Canadians.

We must, however, remember that, being so mixed in race, color, custom and belief, we must see that to maintain a strong, viable, economic success of our Canada, we must be strong together. It is impossible for us to even contemplate separatism. We need each other now more than ever before, to do battle with inflation, unemployment, environmental problems. Let's not be English Canadians, French Canadians. Let's just settle down and be damned good Canadians.

Buyers

Everybody is getting excited about the annual seal slaughter. The hunters and the protesters are showing some real antagonism.

But the real culprit, watches TV and files her nails, perhaps, or thinks about the evening to come.

For if milady did not fancy her glamorous fur coat the slaughter would cease forthwith. I suggest that as long as the ladies want their furs the slaughter will go on.

Economy

It seems rather strange that no one has refuted or attempted to rebut the recent statement of MLA Karen Sanford that the Bennett government is the cause of B.C.'s current economic ills. Maybe this reticence is due to the celebration of International Women's Year or the fear of the old saying, "the female of the species is more deadly than the male".

However, you and I know that Dave Barrett inherited a huge treasury surplus from the previous administration. He then went on a wild spending spree and traipsed across the continent singing the praises of his socialistic government. Naturally this scared hell out of investors and started the exodus of capital from B.C. I know personally of one multinational company that was debating whether to open a branch in Vancouver or the prairies, and chose Calgary.

The mess that the NDP created is hard to clean up. It is enough to try the patience of Job, or the wisdom of Solomon. We can notice a similar situation in Quebec where their premier went to New York and laid an egg.

Erma Bombeck

When women speak of police brutality, they are referring to one thing — their obligation under oath to give their right age on their driver's licence. If they don't, under the false swearing law, they are guilty of a misdemeanor.

The Arizona House Judiciary Committee, in reviewing these laws recently, saw the error of the system and is wisely considering change. As one committee member said, "If we're going to hold everybody accountable for everything they do or say, I think a lot of people are going to be upset."

And that is the greatest understatement since Mary Worth was caught in a hotel lobby posing as a philodendron saying, "I don't mean to meddle."

Happily, I've never been one of those silly, sensitive creatures obsessed with age. If you ask me, I'll tell you right off, "I'm fffffffoffffff . . ." give me a minute, it'll come.

I had a grandmother who lied so much about her age she couldn't remember how old she was. She lied on each of her children's birth certificates — with each birth getting younger, which eventually made the "baby" of the family the oldest, despite the fact her mother gave birth at the age of 12.

As I have always said, being fffffoooo . . . forrrrr . . . is nothing ot be ashamed of. I mean being ffffoooo is better than being thirty and looking sixty.

I know some women who not only lie about their age on their driver's licence, they lie about their weight, height, and their hair color. Small wonder some police officers, after looking over the licence, can only assume they are driving a stolen car.

Goodness gracious, this has to be the biggest flap over nothing I have ever heard in my life. What does it matter that the old biddy who cashes a cheque for you in the supermarket looks at your identification and announces your age over the loud speaker? Or that the turkey who made your car repairs knows you weren't blonde on your licence three years ago. As I told my husband, "It's not so bad being fffoooooor . . ."

"What are you trying to say?" he asked.

"What are you trying to say?" he asked.

"Fffffooooorty!" I said, holding onto the table to steady myself.

"You're fifty!" he said.

"So arrest me!"

Pharmacare: A slap

I am frustrated and amazed at the announcement of the new law on Pharmacare.

We are aging people of Beautiful British Columbia are again being treated as second class citizens and it appears that after all these years we have slaved, paid taxes, large hospital and medical bills, long before we had any medicare. We suffered untold hardships and slavery. We are old and worn out.

Now we are slapped in the face. Many are ill and most have prescription drugs to stay alive and relieved of some pain. There is just no way people on fixed income can finance the Vander Zalm Pharmacare or some other name he will bless it with.

Just imagine all the paper work. And each person will be obligated to purchase a safe keeping box to keep all these labels and receipts in for one year.

It is beyond a doubt the most discriminating bits of legislation ever proposed by a minsister of the cabinet in this province.

And as an individual I can only personally say to 2.5 million people on fixed income is to organize and fight this legislation before it becomes law. Write letters, get on the radio, TV. Anyway to make our plight known.

We have many of the youth behind us and are willing to go along with us in the fight to survival.

Hospital bed shortage 'dangerous'

The number of hospital beds available for the sick in Victoria is, at least, inadequate.

Dangerous, or even intolerable, might better describe the present situation, and the future looks grim.

To quote one doctor, "It's almost impossible to practice medicine in this city."

The urgent surgery admission lists grow daily, with waits of two weeks or more not uncommon.

Frustrated doctors often admit through the emergency ward, only to have patients end up sleeping in halls.

One can't fault the hospitals. Everything humanly possible is being done by the medical profession.

Let's face it, the save money philosophy of Premier Bennett and his bunch just isn't getting the job done.

Unless our present provincial government stops putting dollars before people, as in the case of the up coming changes in Pharmacare, British Columbians can only expect things to get worse.

Confederation series lauded

It was regrettable that the media of press, radio and television did not give the public much inducement to watch the first of four quarterly reports on the state of Canada's confederation which started March 20.

I have not seen either a prevue nor a review of its content anywhere except the terse item in the TV section under Today's Highlights.

I have yet to find many folk who watched it or knew it was on, which is a great pity, for I felt it was about one of the most informative programs ever to be aired by the CBC about the State of Canada's Confederation.

This is a topic that every red-blooded Canadian Citizen should become very familiarized with, and intelligent about enough, to discuss objectively.

The first question dealt with in this open panel program was Is Canada in a state of crisis now? I was agreeably surprised and interested at the depth and historical revelance generated in the 90 minutes of the discussion.

The networks are to be congratulated on their experimental programming of this series to put the same content into each of the two language channels. It was very well presented.

Provincial COURT

Judge William Ostler handed out 38 concurrent terms of three months each to a 23-year-old woman who pleaded guilty Monday to false pretences.

Joann Ralfs, who was arrested in Toronto and brought back to Victoria to face the charges, was given the concurrent sentences in Victoria provincial court after a pre-sentence report was prepared after her guilty pleas March 7.

Nine of the charges, containing 24 counts, involved cheques totalling approximately $9,670 cashed in Greater Victoria; the other charge, with 14 counts, was in connection with an estimated $3,700 in bad cheques written in the Vancouver area.

Defence-lawyer Gordon Macdonald argued for a lengthy probation instead of a jail sentence, pointing to his client's lack of any previous criminal history. He said she became caught in the grip of heroin addiction and after starting the spree of writing bad cheques, had no idea of how to stop.

Macdonald said she kicked the heroin habit and went to Toronto but knew she would eventually be apprehended.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said he couldn't agree probation was appropriate in this case and suggested that anything short of a term of incarceration would not be in the public interest. Mulligan reminded the judge that more than $13,000 in bad cheques had been written to support an illegal habit.

Ostler agreed with Mulligan, noting there were an astonishing number of counts and said he would have liked to be able to give a probation term but felt it was not adequate.

In addition to the three-month term, she was placed on probation for one year.

A Wilkinson Road inmate received a further eight months in jail after pleading guilty to a break-in while out on a pass from the prison.

A charge of possession of a stolen auto was withdrawn after 19-year-old George Thomas Potter pleaded guilty to breaking and entering.

Court was told the break-in occurred at Peter Pollen Ford, and Potter was apprehended when police stopped him on Cedar Hill Cross Road at 3:45 a.m.

Mulligan said Potter had been serving a term of six months' definite and six months' indeterminate for breaking and entering with intent to commit an indictable offence and was sentenced on Sept. 13 last year. He was at large on a weekend pass from 4 p.m. Friday, March 4, to 8 p.m. Sunday, March 6, when the last break-in occurred.

Ostler said he would recommend Potter's time be served at the Alouette River unit for alcoholic rehabilitation, despite learning that the program was restricted to prisoners over the age of 25. Ostler said that by the time Potter reached 25 it might be too late.

□

A 17-year-old youth who pleaded guilty to a Victoria break-in while out on bail awaiting trial on another charge was given a suspended sentence, placed on one year's probation and ordered to perform 200 hours of community service work.

Barry Robert Morgan, of 863 Fleming, pleaded guilty to a March 19 break-in at 2509 Graham Street. Court was told Victoria city police, called to investigate, spotted Morgan leaving by the back door at about 12:40 a.m., vaulting over a fence to make good his escape. He was arrested several hours later.

Defence lawyer Robert Johnson said Morgan wanted to plead guilty after spending 10 days in Wilkinson Road jail awaiting disposition of the case.

□

Ostler imposed a $500 fine on 22-year-old Michael Eric Still, who pleaded guilty March 21 to possession of housebreaking instruments.

Still pleaded guilty to the charge after Victoria city police found him in the premises of Island Medical Laboratores, 1900 Richmond, at 1:45 a.m. March 6.

His companion, 24-year-old Donald Gordon Cole, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering on the same date and was sentenced to one year in jail.

Court was told Still was awaiting trial on another matter when the offence was committed.

In addition to the fine, Still was placed on 18 months' probation and ordered to perform 200 hours of community service work, attend any alcoholic or drug rehabilitation program as prescribed by his probation officer, stay away from the use of any non-prescribed drug and to give up his association with friends involved in drug use.

□

Ronald Gordon Widdifield, 30, of 314 Goldstream was remanded in custody until April 4 for election and possible bail hearing on two counts of rape and one count each of kidnapping, possession of a dangerous weapon (knife) and unlawful confinement.

Widdifield was charged in connection with incidents near Sidney and Ladysmith between March 18 and 21, and defence lawyer David Lisson made the application for a further adjournment.

□

A 37-year-old man who pleaded guilty to his third drunk - driving offence was given a 20-day sentence by Ostler.

Keith Lamont Hartlen, of Franklin River, pleaded guilty to having a blood-alcohol content over .08 per cent on March 19.

Mulligan said Hartlen was spotted on police radar travelling about 40 miles an hour on Tyee Road and reached a speed of 68 miles an hour before he could be stopped.

Court was also informed Hartlen was fined $350 on Sept. 12, 1973, in Port Alberni for the same charge and was fined another $300 on Dec. 17, 1975, in Port Alberni for impaired driving.

□

Judge Blake Allen committed 21-year-old William Joseph Carnegie for higher court trial on charges of unlawfully being in a dwelling house and indecent assault on Nov. 26. The committal was made after a preliminary hearing Monday afternoon in connection with an incident in an apartment at 1271 Yates.

Students drain job fund

Applications were a bit slow in coming in at first, but enough have been received to ensure that all the funds allocated by the provincial government for student employment in the Capital Region this summer can go toward that goal, a spokesman for the Provincial Youth Employment Program said Monday.

The program contributes up to $2 an hour toward the wages of a student working for a business or farm, and $3 to $4 toward the wages of a student working for a non-profit organization.

Vern Burkhardt said about 700 students in the Capitol Region would benefit from the $1,073,000 available for their employment. They will work for farms, businesses, the University of Victoria, Camosun College, the region improvement district, and hospital and school boards.

Another 1,000 students will benefit from a parallel program set up to provide jobs with the provincial government.

AACHEN, West Germany (UPI) — A much-heralded auction of precious violins was a flop.

None of the 200 visitors to the auction this weekend bid on a 17th-century Stradivarius offered for a proud $156,000.

Auctioneer Georg Bongartz also received no offers for a $78,000 Guarneri, dating back to 1701.

The visitors to the auction, the biggest ever in this category in West Germany, greeted Bongartz's expert description of the musical instruments' history with applause, but sat on their purses.

Cancer drive pushes conquest

Cancer can be beaten, says the Canadian Cancer Society, and the Vancouver Island branch, out to support the prospect, will hold its annual fund-raising campaign in Victoria in April.

Campaign chairman W. Stanley Moore said the Greater Victoria unit of the Cancer Society hopes to raise $175,000 toward the national goal of $1.3 million. This money finances almost all the cancer research taking place in Canada.

"Cancer has touched us all," Moore said. "Thanks to people's continuing and generous support of the Canadian Cancer Society, enormous progress has been made. The rate of survival of cancer patients has improved over the last 20 years from 40 per cent to 52 per cent.

The annual fund-raising campaign is also an educational one, Moore said.

"We could be saving many more lives from cancer with what we know today if everyone understood the importance of early diagnosis and prompt treatment of cancer. While there are many more things that can be done for the advanced cancer patient today, treatment is most successful when applied to an early case," he said.

Door-to-door canvasses will be conducted in Sidney and North Saanich, and the rest of Greater Victoria will be solicited by mail. Pamphlets, films and other information are available from the Cancer Society offices, 857 Caledonia, Victoria.

The great pension debate

the rip off

Federal public service employees have paid $1.98 billion into their pension fund and over the years $1.86 billion has been paid out. A drain on the economy? Balderdash! By March 1975, 53,927 retired public service employees were receiving pensions. The average was $5,486. The average for widows was $1,354 and for children $348. That's PER YEAR! Nearly 2 million Canadians are 65 years and older today. Ask them if they have enough money to live on. They worked to make Canada the great country it is today, just as you are doing.

The National Citizens' Coalition thinks Canadians aren't smart enough to see through their distortions. We've been serving Canadians for more than 100 years and we know just how smart they are. As soon as they learn about the private pension plan rip-off, they will insist that the government take over the management of all private pension plans and index them against inflation.

Write to your member of Parliament today and tell him that you want all Canadians to have an adequate indexed pension on retirement.

'Living corpse' surfaces

Three weeks in coffin a warmup

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Bill White, who called himself a "living corpse," was unearthed over the weekend after a three-week underground stay in a coffin. That was just a warmup for his attempt next month at a world record.

"I'm just a little wobbly," White said after emerging from his specially equipped coffin, kissing his wife and guzzling a cold beer. "I'm just a little woozy from my sense of balance."

He said he wanted to shave and shower. In the coffin, he said, "I took sponge baths, but it didn't do any good."

White, 43, says he will attempt to set a 102-day world record next month in Niagara Falls, Ont. He set a world record of 63 days, 22 hours and 31 minutes in Austin, Tex., in 1968, but a Belgian took the record away in 1974 with a 101-day burial.

"When I get finished, he'd better take a damn big lunch with him next time, because he's going to be down there a long time," White said. He plans to be buried at a hotel near the falls.

The former record-holder said he had few problems while six feet underground outside a restaurant here. He said rains caused part of the wooden coffin to give in, so he used a jack to shore up one wall. The coffin was three feet wide, 2½ feet high and six feet long.

White's coffin was padded with four-inch-thick foam rubber and equipped with an air vent, a tube allowing food to be passed to him, a Citizens Band radio, a television and three telephones on which he took up to 80 calls a night from radio stations.

White said he had practised changing channels on the television set before going underground but, once down, left it on one channel.

A sometime country and western singer, White ran a beer parlor in Defuniak Springs, Fla., before deciding several months ago to return to his old profession. This stay underground was his 49th since he first took it up in 1964.

"I didn't have any trouble," he said. "I wasn't down there long enough to miss much. Of course, I missed my wife."

Kay White said she was not bothered by her husband's peculiar calling. "People say he's got to be crazy to do what he does," she said. "But it's no different from Evel Knievel. It's the same thing — it's a job."

Death races with cars in Lebanon

BEIRUT (Reuter) — Lebanon's traffic police, back on the roads after 19 months of civil war, are fighting a losing battle to dampen the spirit of anarchy among many of the country's motorists.

Not the most disciplined drivers at the best of times, many Lebanese fell into driving habits during the war which would reduce North American police to frustration.

In Beirut, cars speeding in the wrong direction along one-way streets with horns blaring and tires squealing are as common a sight as vehicles passing red lights, their drivers paying no attention to the shouts and whistles of enraged police.

Appalled by the chaos, police have warned that stiff measures will be taken against traffic offenders.

The director-general of internal security broadcast a sternly worded communique saying motorists violating any of nine rules will have their licences withdrawn on the spot for at least 24 hours.

The list was headed by "failure to obey traffic signals or signals of traffic policemen," and included driving against traffic, failure to use lights at night and weaving in and out of traffic lanes.

The warning had little apparent effect and certainly did nothing to reduce the number of collisions or near collisions on the roads of Beirut, where last November's truce has brought a return of prewar traffic jams.

"Beirut is one of the few places I knok," said a diplomat here, "where a driver who is obviously in the wrong will shriek at you if you want to assert your right."

The burly driver of a big American car recently gave a practical demonstration in support of the diplomat's assessment.

Cruising against traffic in one of the narrow one-way streets leading off Hamra, once the Middle East's most fashionable shopping thoroughfares, he braked just inches from the front bumper of the first of three cars travelling in the right direction.

With no room for passing, a stalemate ensued. The driver of the offending vehicle left his seat and walked up to the first car of the con convoy, announced his unwillingness to reverse and got back behind the steering wheel.

During the war, such dead locks were occasionally resolved by the adversaries whipping out guns and firing at each other. With the 30,000 strong Arab League peace force now manning road blocks and making spot checks for weapons, such shootouts no longer occur.

Two families have narrow escape as lightning hits

To Mac McKerracher, of 1209 Rockcrest in Esquimalt, the lightning strike sounded "like the roof of the house coming off."

Although the roof escaped damage when lightning Sunday afternoon shattered a 120-foot-high fir tree 60 feet from the house, the McKerracher property was not unscathed.

"The lightning corkscrewed down the tree and then travelled along our metal clothesline and hit the eye bolt and pulled the pulley off the wall," McKerracher said.

The impact broke dishes in a kitchen cupboard on the other side of the wall.

Chunks of wood from the tree were scattered in all directions, and one piece, 10 to 12 feet long, hit a sundeck two houses away.

The McKerrachers were without power for three hours. Their phone and cable television services were also knocked out.

The lightning storm was followed by heavy hail which temporarily whitened streets.

Another lightning strike demolished a brick chimney from the roof up at a house at 1282 Richardson, the Victoria fire department reported.

The strike flashed out of a connecting fireplace and oil furnace, and it was "remarkable" that there was no fire, a fireman said.

Firemen removed bricks from the roof and helped the occupants clean up.

Early superintendent's history research aided

English
. . . access to records

A history of education in the Greater Victoria region by one of its first school superintendents has been given approval by the Greater Victoria School Board.

The board gave its blessing Monday to a recommendation by community relations director Bill Stavdal that the board become a member of the Greater Victoria Civic Archives Society, at a cost of $100 a year, and that it provide assistance to Dr. John F. K. English in research on the history of the school district.

English was the municipal inspector of schools in the Victoria area before school districts were formed, and when the Greater Victoria district came into being in 1946, he was its first district superintendent. He later was chief superintendent for the provincial government.

Stavdal added that school district records are reasonably complete back to 1946, but before that time they are sketchy, and almost no records exist from the 1800s. This was unfortunate, because B.C.'s public education system began in Victoria, he said.

The board will give English access to its records, and provide him with space, and possibly some typing assistance. Stavdal said he has applied for the services of two students during the summer who can assist English in gathering material.

Kemp Lake search for body

Divers will resume their search today of Kemp Lake, six miles west of Sooke, for the body of Richard Michael Laik, 20, of 394 Walter, Saanich, who drowned in a boating accident between 10:30 p.m. and 11 p.m. Friday.

Laik was with two other young men who were crossing the lake in an eight-foot boat which filled with water and overturned. The two others were rescued by people who heard their cries for help.

The three men were with a group of 12 who were planning to spend the weekend in a cabin by the lake. Only access to the cabin is by water.

Publisher denies wanting expropriation

Rumor carrying laid to regional members

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

Colonist publisher Richard Bower has accused unnamed members of the Capital Region Board of spreading rumours in what he thinks might be an effort to damage his reputation, as well as that of his wife.

Bower, a key figure in opposing Capital Region plans for a sewage pumping station in Oak Bay, made the charge Monday night as a member of the audience at an Oak Bay council meeting.

His was only one of several attacks on the region's governing body. Before the meeting was over, Oak Bay was planning to disregard its reputation of quiet dignity to march on the Capital Region.

Acting on the suggestion of Mayor Brian Smith, aldermen agreed to seek a showdown with the Capital Region Board April 13 and to take along residents opposing the pumping station.

Council was dealing with a report from last Thursday's public meeting on the sewage question as Bower made his comments.

"It has come to my attention that rumors are being circulated by members of the Capital Region Board that my wife and I would welcome the expropriation of our house to get off the hook with our neighbors," he said.

He said the story was "as ridiculous as it is untrue."

Bower's Beach Drive home on Shoal Bay was one of a number of sites recommended for a pumping station that opponents say would not only be a costly waste, but a threat to private property and health.

An advisory committee to council decided at Thursday's public meeting to recommend a site on the Victoria Golf Club near Newport and Beach. It was chosen over the Bower property in the final stage of an elimination process.

But the final decision would presumably be up to the region.

The committee also agreed to demand that the region consider a report that it would be wiser and much less expensive to scrap the pumping station idea in favor of adding 600 feet to the McMicking Point outfall.

At Monday night's meeting, Bower also branded as entirely untrue a second rumor that his house was so cold he and his wife had to go to the lower floor to keep warm every time the wind blew.

"I don't know the purpose of these rumors," he said. "Perhaps the Capital Region Board wants to take away our reputation as well as our home.

"Certainly they have succeeded in badly damaging our sense of humor."

He declined afterward to name any specific members of the board in connection with the rumor-spreading charge.

Council, which approved the public meeting report recommending either the golf course site or the McMicking outfall extension, felt that the whole question should be reopened for debate with the region.

It will seek to set up the April 13 meeting with the board. Smith said a sizable delegation representing both council and residents would likely force the region to find a large hall for the meeting.

Ald. Doug Watts, arguing that the whole question of the pumping station should be re-examined, said it appeared ridiculous to spend several million dollars on such a project when the outfall could be extended for about $150,000.

He said it appeared the region had made up its mind some time ago and was refusing to listen to reason.

"The regional board goes on like a juvenile once it gets its mind set," he said.

The question of the value of regional government came up later while council was discussing a Castlegar city council call for a provincial government examination of the concept.

Watts suggested it was a form of government that might have been successful in some respects, but on an over-all basis had become a "growing bureaucracy that really isn't accomplishing much."

Because of its current battle with the region, council decided to table the matter for a month.

30-day duplex delay imposed

If you were planning to start building a duplex in Esquimalt, forget about it. Council Monday night imposed a 30-day moratorium on the issuance of building permits for duplexes.

The moratorium was imposed to give council time to prepare a zoning bylaw amendment approved in principle Monday setting the minimum frontage along the square feet with a 60-foot minim7m frontage along the building line.

Ald. Ken Hill, who introduced the moratorium motion, said that if 30 days wasn't long enough he would propose again that it be extended for another 30 days.

Although Esquimalt's subdivision bylaw sets out standards for duplexes, there is no minimum lot size established for numerous individual duplex-zoned lots scattered throughout the municipality.

Ald. Larry Mann, whose planning zoning and housing committee originated the proposed amendment, said it was necessary to curb the buying up of single-family houses on small duplex-zoned lots and subsequent development of them.

Mann told council that the amendment wouldn't stop developers from consolidating adjoining lots for duplex development.

Both Ald. Ted Wright and Ald. Conrad Lundgren opposed the amendment. Wright said he had seen a number of "very nice duplexes" on lots with less than 60-foot frontage. Lundgren agreed, and told council the problem of the apparent crowding effect of duplexes in neighborhoods could be combatted by downzoning.

Ald. Jim McEvay said that all downzoning would achieve would be the exclusion of all possible future duplex development other than in subdivisions.

Under new business, Mann tried to introduce a motion that would ban all through truck traffic from Craigflower Road. On Mayor Art Young's urging council agreed to refer the matter of the truck ban to committee for study. The committee may consider asking the province to establish a truck route bypassing the municipality.

Sidney, North Saanich have priority

Outsiders to pay more to play at Panorama

By STEPHEN HUME
Colonist Reporter

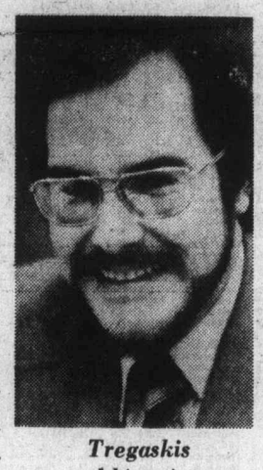
Greater Victoria residents who don't happen to live in Sidney or North Saanich will have to pay extra to use programmed recreation at the new $1.85 million Panorama Leisure Centre, although the centre is using $616,000 in public funds.

Sidney alderman and Peninsula Recreation Commission member Jerry Tregaskis told Sidney council Monday that sports clubs from Sidney and North Saanich will have priority over other municipal clubs, and will also be charged a lesser rate to use the facilities.

(The Oak Bay and Esquimalt recreation centres charge equal amounts to all municipalities.)

Sidney Ald. Bernard Ethier objected to discrimination among municipalities, and said the facilities at the Panorama Leisure Centre would become "a hell of a mess."

Ald. James Lang said a Central Saanich father recently told him he was concerned that his children would "have to play hockey at 2 a.m." because of scheduling priorities. The centre is on East Saanich Road, south of McTavish.



Tregaskis
. . . rights not same

"Central Saanich isn't paying a cent toward the centre, so why should they have the same rights as our people" Tregaskis said.

"But why punish the kids?" Ethier enjoined.

"We're not punishing the kids, their parents are punishing them," Tregaskis said, referring to Central Saanich's rejection in November, 1976, of a cost-sharing scheme for the $1.85 million recreation centre for Sidney and North Saanich.

The recreation centre, recently named Panorama Leisure, was given a $616,000 provincial government grant in November, 1976, toward the cost of a sports arena and swimming pool.

North Saanich Ald. Eric Sherwood, also on the recreation commission, said Monday in an interview that Tregaskis "spoke out of line" on a matter that wasn't a commission policy yet.

Sherwood said the commission had "discussed" the fact that $616,000 in public funds were going toward a centre which might have to establish a priority system because of an "overabundance" of users.

"We took it under consideration," Sherwood said, adding that Tregaskis should know that comments on recreation commission policy were supposed to come from the commission chairman, Robert Hope of Sidney.

Until sewers upgraded

Gorge-Burnside zoning downgraded temporarily

Saanich council voted Monday to downzone land in the Gorge-Burnside area from medium-density to single-family.

The new zoning — in a district bounded generally by Obed, Gorge, Tillicum and Harriet — will remain until municipal services are adequate to service apartment construction, Mayor Ed Lum told about 100 persons attending the public hearing.

The cost of upgrading services and roads in the area was estimated at $12 million by assistant municipal engineer George Gunn.

Council has endorsed redevelopment of parts of the Gorge-Burnside area to medium density use, and enlarging the Gorge trunk sewer is scheduled to start later this year.

Gunn said a portion of the sewer trunk would be completed this year with the entire project probably taking 18 months to two years to complete.

He said there was insufficient sewer capacity for any increase in density in the area to be redeveloped with apartments.

When services were upgraded, he said, the medium-density zoning would be reinstituted.

Lum said that the sewer upgrading could be stalled because of difficulty in obtaining easements. Expropriation proceedings might be necessary, he said.

"What we are doing by recommending downzoning is for the protection of the municipality," he said.

In other zoning matters, council:

● Rejected an application by architect Liam Cassidy to rezone land at the corner of Shelbourne and Donnelly for a two-storey office building.

The proposal was opposed by several neighborhood residents on the grounds that traffic would be a problem and that the plan was not suitable for the 17,766-square-foot tract of land.

It was noted that only 29 parking spaces were included in the plan for the building, which would have housed a bank and professional offices.

● Approved a land-use contract for construction of a bank on the northeast corner of Cadboro Bay Road and Penrhyn.

The 22-foot building would be constructed on a lot now housing a "country cottage."

Richard Boss, newly-elected vice-president of the Cadboro Bay Ratepayers' Association, said the group wanted more time to study the proposal and asked that the matter be tabled for one month.

Sheila Anderson opposed the plan to replace the existing bank in the area's shopping centre with the new structure on grounds that it would start erosion of the residential area.

Ald. John Mika argued that the "drastic step" should not be taken until the community plan had first been discussed with the association members.

The lot in question was, he said, a key one in the entire commercial block, and council's credibility would be at stake if the proposal was approved.

Other rezoning applications endorsed were:

● One for 10 townhouses at 400 Culduthel.

● A 50-foot parking lot extension to Brady's Fish and Chip Shop at 20 Burnside West.

● Rezoning to enable development of a 43-lot subdivision on the north side of Lucas Avenue at the end of Morris Drive.

Poets Streets

Renewal thorny issue

Knock down the old houses and replace them with good apartment buildings that would attract elderly people.

Maintain the homes, for they make up the kind of neighborhood that is sadly lacking in a municipality like Oak Bay.

Those were two sides to a philosophical argument that began to present itself at Monday night's meeting of Oak Bay council.

The question involves the fate of the old district known as Poets Streets — the 1,300-acre gathering of streets running from Elgin to Foul Bay and Oak Bay to Milton.

They proudly bear the names of poets, but to some that is the only real sign of pride left. They consider the district old and somewhat run down.

Ald. Doug Watts said he didn't like to look at it this way, but he felt it would be wise to move toward redevelopment that would see the erection of "first-class apartments."

Old people, he said, would be "delighted to occupy such apartments once they had reached an age when they were unable to maintain individual homes and properties.

If handled properly, federal and provincial financing for such an undertaking could be used in part to ease the heavy tax burden that would fall upon Oak Bay within a few years, he said.

He was basing his case on arguments presented at meetings attended by neighborhood residents. Developers hold options on many of the homes in the neighborhood.

But Ald. John Goult said he felt it necessary to present "the other side of the coin."

The neighborhood, he said, "is perhaps run down as he says, but I think that is partly due to our own indecision."

If council didn't make a decision on what was to happen, Goult said, the district was in danger of falling prey to "block-busting" and other unwanted forms of development.

Arguing that the neighborhood provided a basic need for people on lower and middle incomes, he said: "That is something that does not abound in this municipality."

He also maintained that most of the homes were well kept, and blamed absentee landlords for those that weren't.

Goult disagreed with the belief that elderly people would want to give up their homes and gardens to occupy new apartments.

Ald. Shirley Dowell said more time was needed to digest reports dealing with the question.

"We may not need any more plywood boxes to move older people into — which are firetraps," he said.

Mayor Brian Smith said that in the long run council might want to consider redeveloping part of the area and leaving other parts as they were.

The issue was put over to the next council meeting.

Strait air link 'close to mark'

Transport Minister Jack Davis hinted Monday that a short takeoff and landing (STOL) air link between Victoria and Vancouver could be closer than people think.

He declined to make any time commitments but said Gerald Strongman (SC—Vancouver South) was "close to the mark" with suggestions on how to improve transportation links between Victoria and the Lower Mainland.

Strongman had suggested that with a STOL airport at Ogden Point and another in North Vancouver, travellers could move from the capital to downtown Vancouver in about 45 minutes.

"A STOL system could tie in with the new Burrard ferry system," he said. "People could step off the aircraft in North Vancouver and walk right onto a ferry. Within minutes they would be in downtown Vancouver. Or, if they wished to travel to other areas of the Lower Mainland there is a bus terminal close by to give them that method of transportation."

Anticipating criticism from anti-noise factions, Strongman said the DeHavilland-7, the Canadian built STOL aircraft, had a noise level 90 per cent lower than contemporary jets.

"From 500 feet on landing and takeoff the noise level is 85 decibels," he said. "In layman's language that's about the same noise as a diesel dump truck from the same distance. From 1,800 feet away, the noise level would be so negligible that it would not be retained."

Strongman said that at both ends of the run, STOL aircraft would be taking off and landing over open water and would therefore not create any hazard, noise or danger to residential areas.

Urging the government to consider speedy implementation of the air link, Strongman said it could be the forerunner for a STOL system linking all parts of the province. He said that while the departure of Pacific Western Airlines headquarters and maintenance shops to Alberta was not yet a fait accompli, "I don't think anyone is too optimistic about keeping it here." He suggested that a STOL system, with its minimum runway requirements, could more than adequately replace PWA.

Davis told Strongman he was very "close to the mark" with his suggestion for developing "third level air carrier services." He said the third level carriers were already providing great service in other areas of the province "and can provide even more with a little encouragement and help."

The minister said the province had already received a consultant's report "containing all the statistical date we need" on such services and were now working on a report which will "tell us which routes" to adopt first.

The federal government has also conducted studies at Ogden Point and Work Point. Both meet the standards for short takeoff and landing aircraft.

Trustees won't help fix track

Upgrading of the track at Centennial Stadium will have to go ahead without the assistance of the Greater Victoria School District, the school board decided Monday night.

According to Centennial Stadium Committee chairman Robert Hutchison, "there is now an urgent need to resurface the track, to widen it, and give it a 400-metre length."

Hutchison told the board that the stadium committee is looking for ways to pay for the improvements, and has asked municipalities involved in the original stadium construction costs to pay per-capita shares of the estimated $145,000 needed to carry out the work.

The federal and provincial governments and the University of Victoria may pay most of the cost — as much as $108,000 — Hutchison said, and he "invited" the school board to make a capital contribution.

District superintendent Allan Stables told the board the school board is strictly limited by the Public School Act regarding contribution toward capital financing.

The board can only spend money for capital projects which take place on its own grounds, and which the board controls, Stables said.

Trustee Lavinia Greenwood suggested that rental fees for use of the stadium should reflect capital as well as operating expenses.

In the end the board went with a motion by trustee Peter Yorke that it not contribute to the capital expenses of the stadium.

Gas parley still seeking answers

A three-way conference between Alberta, Washington and B.C. hopes to have the answers to shortfall gas supplies within two or thre days.

At issue is an offer by Pan-Alberta to supply 200 million cubic feet of natural gas daily to B.C. in order for the province to meet long-term contracts with the U.S. Premier Bennett stated last week that he doesn't object to using Alberta gas to meet contracted demands, but is concerned about the length of the contract.

Pan-Alberta has offered a five-year contract or a 12-year contract. Bennett said he is fearful that such long-term contracts would curb gas exploration in B.C. because the exploration companies would be concerned about disposition of any gas found.

Representatives from both provinces and the U.S. met all day Monday to hammer out an acceptable agreement which would see B.C. able to meet its commitments without discouraging further exploration and development in northern B.C.

Mines and Petroleum Resources Minister James Chabot, who led the B.C. delegates to the conference table, said he hoped to be able to make an announcement in two or three days.

Bennett said B.C. was not trying to avoid its long-term obligations.

"B.C. is aware of the shortfall on the Westcoast (Transmission) contract and I've been trying to do something about increasing our own reserves of gas. We are also aware of our American customers needs and of the offer by Pan-Alberta.

"It's because of the different positions being developed, and perhaps not fully understood by each of the parties, we thought it would be wise to get all of them together in order to solve this delicate problem."

Bennett said he had no desire to "be a bad neighbor to our neighbors in the south, the Americans, not a bad neighbor to our good friends in Alberta. I think we have some areas in which we can work out this problem, a problem facing us all."

Bennett did not attend Monday's session.

Coal test set

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro said Monday it will mine 6,000 tons of coal from its Hat Creek property this summer for test burning in Alberta.

The test burning is part of a multi-million-dollar research program to decide whether to proceed with a surface mine and 2,000-megawatt coal-fired thermal power plant in the region.

The coal will be mined from two large trenches during a three-week period and moved by truck and train to Alberta Power Ltd.'s Forestburg plant near Edmonton.

Hydro said in a press release the project will allow testing of mining and handling equipment as well as provide data to aid in the design of boilers, electrostatic precipitators and environmental protection systems.

As live TV it figured to be bigger than the roller derby.

Many were even expected to pass up Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman Thursday night.

But, alas, it was not to be. The Loyal Opposition Monday would have none of it. Perhaps they know something.

It was a shame, really. Instead of agonizing over your Oscar picks like you did last night, it might have a bit of sport to consider what would happen to your wallet for about another year of a grit regime, then watch it all come true in a live commons telecast.

This bears a bit of investigation. Perhaps next Budget Night could be better organized. Newspapers across the country could set up little contests with the winners getting free trips to Ottawa instead of to Hollywood. Otto Lang might have even made room for the winners in a taxpayers airplane.

If you're mulling over Thursday night's Big Mac attack consider this:

- What is the significance of the date? Does March 31 — the end of government's fiscal years — have anything to do with it? Bet on it.
- Will foreign exchange controls be implemented? What about investments outside the country? Could be.
- Personal tax cuts? Don't bet on it. The minister feels that he's doing enough through indexing measures. These have shorted revenue by $1.2 billion.
- The stock markets might get a needed boost by a definite indication of the winding down of the Anti-Inflation Board. It's a certainty.
- Everybody is predicting things like improved investment tax credits and corporate tax concessions. Us, too.

It may sound very nationalistic to boast of 200-mile fishing limits such as Canada imposed last Jan. 1. But few know just what is involved in terms of measurement.

The Australian and New Zealand Banking Group's quarterly report quite properly refers to the subject as the 368-kilometre limit. Their measurement is required because those countries "went metric" a few years ago.

The 368 kilometres referred to are in fact 200 nautical miles — or, in other words, 230 statute miles.

In New Zealand's case, their declaration, if confirmed, will give them the fourth-largest fishing area in the world. Principal catch is snapper.

There's yet another application for computers. Housing Corporation of B.C. has a computer model for financial planning of an Assisted Rental Program project.

The model does a cash flow analysis and financial planning package in 12, 24 and 36-year packages. Required input data includes the land cost, building cost, investor's equity, number of units, monthly rent, operating cost, capital-cost-allowance rate, loan rate, loan period and loan amount. Included, of course, are provisions for an annual rental-rate adjustment and an annual operating-cost adjustment to reflect an expected inflation rate.

ARP combines assistance provided by Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. with additional assistance from the provincial government to provide up to $3,000 per unit in the first year of the operation of a rental housing project.

Then it gets complicated. Each successive year of the next nine years sees this assistance drop by one-tenth.

Senator didn't know figures

WASHINGTON (CP) — Canadian Industry Minister Jean Chretien scored an early accomplishment Monday as he began two days of meetings with influential U.S. figures.

In a conversation with Al Ullman, the Oregon Democrat who heads the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives, the minister corrected Ullman's erroneous view of the Canada-U.S. auto trade balance.

A high Canadian source said the minister was "quite amazed" that a key congressional figure like Ullman would believe Canada still is running a large surplus in trade under the terms of the 1965 Canada-U.S. auto pact.

After Ullman made a statement to that effect, Chretien corrected him, noting that Canada suffered a deficit of $1 billion last year.

The over-all deficit came from a $1.5 billion surplus in motor vehicle trade and a $2.5 billion deficit in vehicle parts. The net $1 billion deficit was down considerably from the $1.9 billion deficit of 1975, however.

One Canadian official said many U.S. figures simply do not realize that the situation has changed from the early years of the auto pact, when Canada was running large surpluses.

Gold off $4; pound steady

LONDON (AP) — The price of gold dropped about $4 to $149.70 an ounce in London on Monday after last Friday's 18-month high of $153.62. In Zurich, bullion prices followed suit.

On Europe's foreign exchange markets trading was described as quiet, with the U.S. dollar easing against most major currencies.

Dealers said news that the United States had a record merchandise trade deficit of $1.87 billion last month had a depressing but limited influence on the American currency.

Following Friday's high of $153.875 a troy ounce, the cost of gold in Zurich fell to $149.625 an ounce. The price of the metal had been rising since the beginning of the year but has fluctuated daily during the last week.

On the money markets, the British pound remained almost unchanged in quiet trading which came one day before publication of Prime Minister James Callaghan's budget proposals for fiscal 1977-78.

Dispute stops drilling

CALGARY (CP) — A group of seven companies drilling for oil and natural gas off the Labrador coast said Monday it is suspending drilling operation because of a jurisdictional dispute between the federal and Newfoundland governments.

In a news release, Total Eastcan Exploration Ltd., as operator of the Labrador group of companies, said the consortium will not undertake drilling operations off Labrador this year.

Members of the consortium are Amerada Minerals Corp. of Canada Ltd., Aquitaine Co. Ltd., Gulf Oil Canada Ltd., Sun Oil Co. Ltd. and Total Petroleum (North American) Ltd.

Changes widen pupil control

Grounds for suspending pupils from public schools in B.C. have been clarified by new amendments to the Public Schools Act regulations.

The amendments define the grounds for suspension as wilful disobedience to a teacher or behavior which has a harmful effect on the character or persons of other pupils. They also authorize principals to assign school work to be done during the period of the suspension.

The amendments follow changes to the regulations last year which gave principals the power to suspend pupils for up to five days without requiring board approval.

The new regulations give principals power to lift suspensions at their discretion after discussions with the parents of the pupil involved.

"It is the intention of the government to give full backing to teachers and principals in establishing order and a healthy learning environment in the schools," McGeer said.

He added that schools were not meant to be correctional institutions. "The ministry will work with the B.C. Teachers' Federation and the B.C. School Trustees Association to be certain that alternate arrangements are available for those students who cannot fit into the normal school environment."

Fund drive

Firefighters from 10 Greater Victoria fire departments will take part in the annual muscular dystrophy fund-raising drive on Friday and Saturday. Last year, they raised $27,170 to help finance research into the disease, which causes degeneration of muscle tissue and is usually fatal.

Pipeline bids below estimate

Five contractors' bids were opened Monday for installation of a water pipeline to give the Saanich Peninsula a temporary hookup with the Greater Victoria water supply.

Estimated cost to lay 11,600 feet of polyethylene pipe to hook into the Greater Victoria pipeline near Beaver Lake was $35,000.

Lowest bid was $10,000 below that estimate.

The bids are due to be considered by Saanich Peninsula Water Commission at a meeting today, with a recommendation they go to the Capital Region Board on April 13. Construction would start shortly after the board approval.

Bids were submitted by: Alberni Excavation, (a division of Dura Construction Ltd.) $31,397; Don Mann Excavating Ltd., Victoria, $28,000; S. and R. Rentals Ltd., Victoria, $45,650; Chew Excavating Ltd., Victoria, $32,547; and Dench Excavating Ltd., Sidney, $24,557.

Goodwill recoups booth losses

Vandalism has forced Goodwill Enterprises to pull in many of its deposit booths in the Victoria area, but the non-profit society is going strong with pickups from individual homes, and now has extended hours at its receiving area.

Alex Reid, Goodwill community relations officer, says the policy of keeping the receiving area open for longer hours means that goods reach the plant in better condition, making them more valuable to the society which assists many handicapped people on Vancouver Island.

"The better quality and condition of donations brought to the plant has been very noticeable and has been greatly appreciated," Reid said.

The reception dock on Wilson Street, just behind the Goodwill plant at 220 Bay Street, is open from 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. on weekdays, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends. Home pickups can be arranged by calling 385-6791.

Witness tells perjury trial:

'I saw pair drag body'

A crown witness in the recent Ross murder trial told a Victoria county judge Monday of seeing a second man help move the body of Malcolm Preston Cunningham on Nov. 1, 1975.

Rodney K. M. Steigenberger, 23, was testifying at the trial of Russell Benjamin Mutter, 22, of 2569 Dingwall, Duncan, who is charged with perjury in connection with testimony at a preliminary hearing June 2, 1976, on a charge of murder against David John Ross.

Ross was subsequently tried and convicted of killing Cunningham and is appealing the B.C. Supreme Court verdict.

A jury at Nanimo deliberated five hours before finding Ross guilty of the so-called contract killing in which a .30-calibre rifle was used to shoot Cunningham in brush off Humpback Road.

At the opening of the perjury trial before Judge M.L.T. Drake, the crown entered a transcript of evidence given by Mutter at the preliminary hearing in which he denied having been with Ross or having helped to move a body.

Mutter's transcript evidence also denied that he attended the place on a power line road with Steigenberger and Ross.

Prosecutor A. A. Petronio asked official court reporter Dennis Pearce to read from the transcript at designated places.

At one point in the preliminary hearing Mutter was asked if Ross had said: "Nobody talks, or they (meaning you and Steigenberger) will end up like him (meaning the body)."

Pearce said the parentheses were his but the words they contained were those of the prosecutor at the time.

Mutter's reply was "No."

The transcript also showed Mutter was asked if Ross said, "If I dont' get you somebody else will. I have lots of friends."

And Mutter's reply in the transcript was again, "No."

Steigenberger was called to the witness stand and admitted a criminal record dating from 1972 with convictions for offences ranging from impaired driving to false pretences, forgery, robbery, theft, breaking and entering, wilful damage and escaping custody, and sentences from 14 days to 18 months.

He said he was with Mutter on Nov. 1, 1975, when they drove up to a house on Skinner Street where Ross was standing outside.

Ross and Mutter had a conversation about a gun and a drug ripoff, Steigenberger said. He quoted Mutter as saying he did not want to lend a gun for any kind of drug ripoff because it might come back on him.

But Ross, he said, replied that Mutter shouldn't worry because "this guy isn't coming back."

The witness described the passing of a .30-calibre M1 carbine from Mutter to Ross. But before he stepped into the house, Steigenberger said he saw Cunningham and a man he subsequently learned was Gordon Caldwell sitting in a blue Mustang in a nearby driveway.

From where he was standing in the house he was able to see the Mustang drive off, Steigenbergr said.

Later, he said, he and Mutter went looking for Ross because Mutter was concerned about the gun. They eventually found Ross later that night and there was some conversation about whether the gun had been used, Steigenberger said.

He said Ross nodded.

Still later, he said he and Mutter got into Ross's blue Mustang and drove to Goldstream.

"We were going to observe that the gun had been used," Steigenberger said.

When they got to a place off the railway tracks and powerline road, the car was turned around and "the headlights shone on a body lying face down in front of the vehicle.

"We, the three of us, got out of the vehicle and went forward of the vehicle to where the body was lying," the witness said.

He said he recognized the body as that of Malcolm Cunningham when Ross turned it over and began going through the pockets.

Steigenberger said he noted one perforation in the body's white shirt and what looked like bloodstains.

"I then backed up, away from the body," he said.

There followed more conversation with Mutter, and then Ross and Mutter dragged the body "sideways toward the railway tracks," the witness said.

He told of going with Ross and Mutter to 2605 Sooke Road where a fire was set in an incinerator and some articles were put in by Ross and Mutter. They all cleaned mud from their shoes, he said, and tried to remove bloodstains from Ross' trousers.

When they drove back to town, Ross was let off at a Pine Street address and the others went back to Skinner.

Steigenberger said he next went to the place where he had seen the body in company with RCMP in May of last year after being picked up for parole violation. He said he gave crown evidence at the preliminary and at the murder trial and that he acted as crown witness in another, unrelated matter.

He is not now in custody, he told defence counsel Gordon Hayes in cross-examination.

He also said he had changed a statement he made to police, and agreed with the defence that one statement made no reference to what he described seeing at Goldstream.

He said this was because he had agreed with Mutter he would not give evidence about going to see the body.

Hayes asked if the witness was charged with anything in connection with the Ross matter, and Steigenberger said no.

He was asked what police offered him in exchange for his testimony.

"Protection," the witness said.

The trial continues today, when it is expected the court will rule on two voir dire trials for admissibility of evidence.

A strong case—Ney

Vote could spark resident exodus

By DAVE FINLAYSON
Colonist Correspondent

NANAIMO — If voters turn down the $15.5 million sewer and water referendum next Saturday (April 2), residents of outlying areas would have a strong case for wanting out of the city, Mayor Frank Ney said Friday.

Speaking at a press conference, Ney said when the city was amalgamated two years ago the new areas assumed their share of such things as recreation — and the old city welcomed this.

But if the referendum is turned down for the projects, which are for the newer areas, those people would have a right to wonder what the benefits are of staying in the city.

"The old part of the city wanted amalgamation so the new areas could share the recreation costs. Now the pendulum is swinging the other way."

The vote was forced by the Concerned Citizens' Committee who gained sufficient names to a petition. The CCC opposes the city's financing method whereby all city taxpayers pay for all sewer and water projects.

The CCC wants only those people directly benefitting from the work to pay for it.

Ney also said people in the newer areas could justifiably demand a change in the taxation formula and even a rebate, if the bylaws go down.

However, he said he was confident the public recognizes the common sense in the bylaws and the city's approach to the problems of sewer and water.

Ney also said very few areas of the city are going to escape the burden of new mains or replacement of old pipes in the near future.

Although the old part of the city will not directly benefit from the current projects, a recent engineering report indicates the old city will need about $4 million worth of water main replacement, some of which are more than 60 years old, he said.

And he said a sewer study still has to be done, which may uncover similar findings.

Ald. Alex Virostko said it should be made clear that none of the proposed projects are planned in isolation.

Althoug it may appear that water lines will pass through relatively lightly populated areas, in fact they are planned to link up with other lines and provide an efficient water system for the whole of the city.

And he said only a few of the lines are distribution lines to serve small areas.

He said most of the lines are as much as 70 per cent for over-all supply of the city rather than local distribution.

And the planned lines are not a recent city "brainwave," he said. As long as four years ago the Greater Nanaimo Water Board had worked out a long range plan for the city which included many of these current projects.

City administrator Ted Chace said if the bylaws passed the mill rates would not go up until 1979, when the major portion of the money would be needed.

And he said by that time the mill rate could very well go down because of a levelling off of assessments.

In answer to another question, Virostko said the projects would generate about $4.5 million in labor at a time when the city's unemployment is as high as 14 per cent.

He said council would almost certainly stipulate in any contract that as much local labor be used as possible.

Suit started against B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Dawson and Hall Ltd. has started a British Columbia Supreme Court action against the provincial government and the minister of public works for an extra $218,244 which it seeks in connection with concrete work at the new courthouse centre in downtown Vancouver. The request for more money followed a dispute related to cement walls in the project.

Advance poll hints at large turnout

NANAIMO — If the advanced poll is any indication, there could be a big turnout this Saturday for the vote on the controversial $15.5 million sewer and water bylaws.

Returning Officer Kathie Waugh said 279 advanced votes were cast Friday — more than the advanced poll for the November civic election.

Referendums traditionally draw a much lighter turnout than elections. Only 9.9 per cent of the eligible voters turned out last September to vote on the civic election system alternatives.

However, Waugh said this Saturday's vote comes during the schools' spring break when more people are likely to be out of town. Only those who will not be available this Saturday could vote in the advanced poll.

The vote was forced by the Concerned Citizens' Committee, which opposes the financing formula of the bylaws.

The CCC says the city's plan to spread the cost of the projects over all city taxpayers is pandering to developers.

The city maintains it is the only method that is fair to all residents, and was the basis of amalgamation two years ago.

Romania quake toll now 1,570

VIENNA (Reuter) — The Romania earthquake on March 4 killed 1,570 persons, President Nicolae Ceausescu said Monday. The latest figure raised the known death toll by 29, the Agerpress news agency reported. Ceausescu, in a speech in Bucharest, said 11,300 people were injured and 854 were still under medical treatment. The quake destroyed 32,900 homes and made 35,000 families homeless.

Angry Australians rip anti-royalist banners

PERTH, Australia (Reuter) — Scuffles broke out as angry spectators tore down banners held by about 30 anti-royalist demonstrators during an enthusiastic welcome for Queen Elizabeth here Monday.

But the Queen and Prince Philip appeared to be unaware of the incidents which took place at the back of a cheerful crowd of 6,000.

The three or four isolated scuffles broke out when spectators turned on some of the demonstrators who were carrying republican flags and signs calling for Australia to become a republic outside the Commonwealth.

Later, during a speech by the Queen, one demonstrator raised a banner calling for an end to the government of Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser.

About a dozen protesters were grouped around the banner and several punches were thrown before the banner was torn down to loud cheers.

Workers strike Japan railway

TOKYO (AP) — About 280,000 workers of the state-owned national railways staged a four-hour strike in major Japanese cities for higher wages and improved working conditions. The transportation ministry estimated that more than three million commuters and travellers were affected by the strike.

Dodger caught in squeeze in Grapefruit League action

Major-league clubs are at the height of spring training for the baseball season which opens next week and there is plenty of action daily in the 'Grapefruit League'. Teddy Martinez of Los Angeles Dodgers found himself trapped Monday as he tried to dash home when a pitch got away from John Stearns of New York Mets. Stearns recovered, however, and tagged Martinez out in a run-down.

Canucks playoff hopes may rest on final game

Minnesota North Stars may not be one of the National Hockey League's glamor teams but if there were 30,000 seats in Vancouver's Pacific Coliseum all would be filled on Sunday when the North Stars and Canucks close out their schedule play.

It became all but certain that the game would decide a playoff spot when the North Stars came through with a 5-4 Monday win over St. Louis Blues, who have clinched Smythe Division honors.

Victory boosted the North Stars, who have a game in hand, into a third-place tie with the Canucks. Three points ahead, but not comfortably safe, are Chicago Black Hawks.

Canucks have the better of it in the last week of the schedule. Their three remaining games are at home, and the North Stars will be playing their fifth game in seven days when they go in against the Canucks for the schedule finale.

Los Angeles Kings are in Vancouver tonight, and the slump-ridden Colorado Rockies, winless in 17 games, are Pacific Coliseum opponents on Friday.

North Stars host Cleveland Barons tonight, then finish on the road with games in Detroit on Thursday and Los Angeles on Saturday before arriving in Vancouver.

Still not quite certain of a playoff spot, the Hawks are in St. Louis Wednesday and in Atlanta on Friday before closing out Sunday at home against Cleveland.

North Stars lost a 3-1 lead and had to come from behind in a somewhat loose and wide-open game.

Blues scored three successive second-period goals to take a 4-3 lead, then the North Stars came back with the tying and winning goals in the last minute of the period.

Once again, it was rookies who bailed out the Minnesota club. Alex Pirus shot the 4-4 goal at 19:05, and Glen Sharpley, with his 25th scoring shot, got what was to be the game-winner 49 seconds later.

Sunday action resulted in the elimination of New York Rangers as a playoff club and a tightening of battles for first place in the Patrick and Adams Dvisions as well as more records for Montreal Canadiens. Highlights —

● Rangers became an official casualty when Chicago won a 5-3 decision in a game featured by Bob Murray scoring goals 17 seconds apart in the first minute of the second period. The Chicago defenceman, who had only one goal last season, believes it was his first two-goal effort;

● New York Islanders, who are a game closer to the end of the schedule, closed within two points of Philadelphia Flyers by taking Cleveland Barons, 6-3, with Denis Potvin scoring their last two goals;

● Boston Bruins, who are in Buffalo Wednesday night for their biggest game of the season, moved within a point of the Sabres by shutting out Pittsburgh Penguins, 3-0. Gilles Gilbert needed to make only 11 stops to get his first shutout of the season;

● Canadiens, who have sewn up Vezina Trophy honors by allowing only six goals in an eight-game winning streak, shut the door on the helpless Detroit Red Wings, 6-0. It was the fourth shutout of the season for Bunny Larocque, who faced only 17 shots. Canadiens broke the record of 125 points they set last year, now having 127, and tied their record of 58 wins in a season. Guy Lafleur extended his consecutive-game point streak to 25 with two assists and Doug Risebrough managed his first 20-goal season by shooting his 19th, 20th and 21st goals;

● Washington Capitals scored seven goals for the second game in a row, this time besting the inconsistent Toronto Maple Leafs, 7-4.

Wilson to coach Team Canada

TORONTO (CP) — Johnny Wilson, coach of Colorado Rockies of the National Hockey League, has been named head coach of the Canadian team competing in next month's world hockey championship at Vienna.

Alan Eagleson, chairman of Team Canada 77, made the announcement Monday night after consultations with Colorado club officials.

Eagleson said he and team general-manager Derek Holmes and Bill Watters assistant general manager, discussed several candidates and agreed unanimously Monday morning to approach Wilson.

"Wilson and club officials Munson Campbell and Ray Miron were enthusiastic about the appointment," Eagleson said.

"Johnny has had NHL experience in Los Angeles, Detroit and Colorado and his work this year with the Rockies made him our choice."

"We were unable to approach him until his team was officially eliminated."

The Rockies were eliminated from the playoffs Saturday night when they lost 2-1 to Atlanta Flames.

Nine Barons ready

TORONTO (CP) — Nine Cleveland Barons have said they will play in the world hockey championships starting April 29 in Vienna after being approached by Team Canada officials, Bill Watters, the team's assistant general manager has reported.

Watters confirmed a report out of Cleveland that the nine players are forwards Dennis Maruk, Al MacAdam, Bob Murdoch, Wayne Merrick, Ralph Klassen and Rick Hampton, defencemen Bob Stewart and Greg Smith and goaltender Gilles Meloche.

Watters, however, denied the part of the Cleveland report that said the nine Barons have been named to the team.

The Team Canada players are scheduled to gather in Toronto April 4 and will depart for two exhibition games in Goteborg, Sweden the following day.

Watters said that 20 players and a coach will be named at a press conference here Thursday or Friday.

Defending champs here tonight

Bruins ready but wary

New Westminster Bruins have their sights set on a third straight appearance in a Memorial Cup series but they're not taking any Western Canada Hockey League opponent lightly.

Bruins have reached the national junior hockey final game in the last two seasons only to lose out to the Ontario champion — Toronto Marlboros in 1975 and Hamilton (now St. Catharines) Fincups in 1976.

This year, the Memorial Cup series will be played May 8-15 at the Pacific Coliseum in Vancouver, almost a second home to the Bruins.

The big black-and-gold squad, visitors to Memorial Arena tonight for an 8 o'clock game against Victoria Cougars, had little difficulty winning its second Western Division championship in as many seasons.

But the Bruins have been less than 100 per cent in recent games, particularly since the loss of star defenceman Barry Beck with viral pneumonia earlier this month.

General manager Bill Shinske said Monday that Beck has resumed skating but may not see action until this weekend.

"Barry lost about 13 pounds so we've had to bring him along slowly," Shinske said. "I don't know if he'll play Thursday (in the opening game of the playoffs against the Cougars). It's up to Ernie (coach Ernie McLean) and he's not sure when Beck will be ready."

McLean has been using several young players in recent games and some of them could see action tonight as Bruins and Cougars wrap up their 72-game league schedules.

John Ogrodnick, Bruce Howes, Terry Kirkham and goalkeepers Larry Lozinski and Richard Martens have been practicing with the Bruins since farm-teams Maple Ridge Bruins and Abbotsford Flyers were eliminated from the B.C. Junior Hockey League playoffs.

"We're not taking the Cougars lightly," Shinske said, "and that goes for Kamloops and Portland too. It's going to be hard getting out of the Western Division again."

Second-place Kamloops Chiefs knocked off the Bruins 4-3 at Queen's Park Arena on Sunday and earned home-ice advantage for their best-of-seven playoff with Portland Winter Hawks which starts Friday in Kamloops.

Cougars and Bruins continue their playoff here Saturday, in New Westminster on Sunday and here Wednesday, April 6.

The Victoria squad has been eliminated in the league semi-finals by the Bruins in the last two seasons. Bruins scored a 4-2 win in the 1975 semi-finals and were 4-0-1 in the 1976 series.

Should Bruins win the Western Division final, they will likely face Brandon Wheat Kings for the league championship and the Memorial Cup berth.

Wheat Kings finished their league schedule Sunday on a record-setting note by hammering the hapless Regina Pats 12-4.

Brandon finished with a record 116 points, four more than the previous mark set by the 1975-76 Bruins.

Wheat Kings had only 10 losses, one fewer than the 1972-73 Saskatoon Blades, and equalled the 1975-76 Bruins for wins (54).

In addition league scoring champion Bill Derlago ran his record-setting goals total to 96, six more than that of former Wheat King Ron Chipperfield, by scoring four goals. Derlago finished with 178 points and topped linemate Ray Allison by 41 points, eclipsing the record of 37 established in the 1967-68 season by Bobby Clarke of the Flin Flon Bombers.

Brandon rookie Brian Propp finished with 80 assists, one more than the record held by Tom Serviss of the 1968-69 Calgary Centennials.

Derlago, Allison and Propp also became the first forward line in WCHL history to finish 1-2-3 in the scoring race.

In other Sunday games, Calgary topped Winnipeg Monarchs 10-7; Saskatoon bounced Flin Flon 8-1 and Lethbridge Broncos posted a 5-3 win over Medicine Hat Tigers.

Chiefs and Hawks stage wild brawl

PORTLAND, Ore. — Portland Winter Hawks scored a 10-2 win over Kamloops Chiefs Monday night in a Western Canada Hockey League game delayed in the first period by a massive brawl.

Fourteen players — seven from each team — were banished with game misconducts at 16:44 of the opening period when all the players on the ice and several from each bench joined in the fray.

Officials assessed 127 of the 244 penalty minutes in the period to the Winter Hawks.

The Chiefs led 1-0 at the time but lost three defencemen in the melee and were no match for the Winter Hawks in the remaining time.

Portland scored six straight goals in the second period and outscored the Chiefs 4-1 in the final 20 minutes.

The game had no bearing on the final standings in the Western Division as Chiefs had clinched second spot on Sunday night. Kamloops finished with 80 points and Portland placed third with 79.

Tony Currie led the Hawks with three goals, boosting his season total to 73. Wayne Babych and Dave Hatheway each contributed two goals and others were added by Barry Brown, Brent Peterson and Blake Wesley. Ryan Hatfield scored both goals for Kamloops.

Portland held a 45-25 edge in shots and took 150 of 294 penalty minutes. Only 1102 fans were in attendance.

Sather steers Oilers toward playoff berth

EDMONTON (CP) — Glen Sather has Edmonton Oilers directed toward a playoff berth in the Western Division of the World Hockey Association although he was not the club's first choice as coach.

Bep Guidolin resigned as coach, but remained as general manager with the Oilers. He admitted Sather was the only man available for the coaching job, primarily because Guidolin's first choice, Larry Wilson, had been hired by Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League.

Sather said in an interview he isn't intimidated by the job and he is looking forward to next year.

But he added "We have to make the playoffs first. And we're going to."

A key is a home-and-home weekend series with Calgary Cowboys this week.

The Cowboys moved within two points of the Oilers Sunday night as the result of a 5-4 win over Phoenix and a 5-2 loss by the Oilers to New England.

In other Sunday games: Winnipeg topped Houston 5-2 with Bobby Hull firing three goals; Quebec Nordiques blanked Cincinnati 4-0 as Real Cloutier scored his 64th goal of the season; and Birmingham blasted Indianapolis, 7-3.

Sather, who played with eight pro teams — six in the NHL — before joining Edmonton this season, owns a hotel near Banff, Alberta's leading ski resort and says he sometimes thinks of retiring there. But now there's a catch.

"This opportunity came up before I expected it though.

"The worst thing is to take over in the middle of the season. We've had troubles in the front office and we've had dozens of player changes, but the biggest problem is that there are some things you can't change this late in the season."

Guidolin had the Oilers upset and tense and Sather moved quickly to change that, being careful, however, not to cast himself as an opponent of the tempestuous Guidolin.

He appears to be succeeding.

Unhappy Ranger flattens Lucchesi

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — Texas Rangers second baseman Len Randle, enraged at being called a punk by manager Frank Lucchesi, Monday punched Lucchesi in the face and broke his right cheekbone. Randle was immediately suspended.

Lucchesi, who last week said he was tired of Randle's griping about his status with the Rangers, was admitted to hospital. A doctor in charge of the hospital's emergency room said Lucchesi was in pain when he was admitted and that X-rays would be taken to determine if surgery would be required.

The Lucchesi-Randle confrontation had been building throughout spring training.

Randle came to camp this season upset because the Rangers already had penciled in Bump Wills, son of former major league base-stealing star Maury Wills, as the starting second baseman. When Wills' picture appeared on the cover of a national sports magazine last week, Randle became even more incensed.

He threatened to walk out of camp but was stopped by pitchers Gaylord Perry and Bert Blyleven and first baseman Mike Hargrove.

Following that incident, Lucchesi said:

"It's just too damn bad somebody stopped him from leaving. I'm tired of these punks saying play me or trade me. Anyone who makes $80,000 a year and gripes and moans all spring is not going to get a tear out of me."

Shortly before the Rangers' exhibition game with Minnesota Monday, Randel confronted Lucchesi at the batting cage.

Lucchesi said Randle came up to him and said 'I don't think you are treating me right,' said club spokesman Burt Hawkins. Frank told him 'let's go over here and talk about it.'

After about two minutes of conversation, witnesses said, Randle suddenly threw a punch at Lucchesi.

Randle stepped back and hit Lucchesi two or three times as he was going down and then hit him while he was on the ground, Hawkins said.

O'Brien held afternoon-long discussions with executive vice-president Eddie Robinson and club owner Brad Corbett, who was at his office in Fort Worth. One source close to the club said Corbett was upset with both O'Brien and Robinson because he had wanted to trade Randle earlier in the spring.

Oriole executive suggests switch

MIAMI (AP) — Baltimore Orioles are considering a switch from the American League to the National League in 1978, Jerold C. Hoffberger, the Orioles board chairman, said Monday.

"Baltimore continues to oppose the introduction of an American League team in Washington, and it will continue to oppose the transfer of an American League team to the National League for the purpose of putting a team in Washington," Hoffberger said.

But, Hoffberger said the Orioles would consider making application for membership in the National League.

"Under those circumstances, the American League would then be free to do whatever it wanted with its trouble franchises, including putting one in Washington," he said.

If the Orioles moved to the National League, the leagues would be evenly balanced for the desired inter-league play.

Hoffberger, who introduced his plan to the American League club owners in Tampa, Fla., last week, said he is not "unhappy with the American League."

"But I am unhappy with the constant pressure baseball has been putting on the Baltimore franchise."

Saanich midgets edged

CASTLEGAR — Kimberley defeated Vancouver Island champion Saanich Braves 7-6 Monday in the opening game of the B.C. midget hockey championship for both teams.

Jackie Wallis and Randy Wickware each had two goals for the Braves and Phil Varcoe and Jamie Bowes had the others.

Saanich meets Castlegar at 9 a.m. and Kamloops at 8 p.m. today as the eight-team round-robin series continues.

New turf for Taylor Field

REGINA (CP) — Taylor Field, rugged home of the Canadian Football League's Saskatchewan Roughriders, will have a new turf surface this season.

A $13,000 resodding program has been approved by city council to begin May 15 and officials hope it will be completed in time for the first exhibition game June 22.

Council was told the existing turf is so bad no football could have been played on it.

Meanwhile, negotiations are continuing between the city, the team and the province on a $6 million program to enlarge seating capacity and install artificial turf.

The team has requested an additional 8000 sideline seats be added to the 22,625-stadium. About 800 seats in the childrens' bleachers are being converted to adult seats this year.

The team sold out all sideline seats at all of its games last year.

Net queen survives scare

NEW YORK (UPI) — Chris Evert's reign as queen of women's tennis was shaken Sunday, but she survived a scare from England's 20-year-old Cinderella, Sue Barker, 2-6, 6-1, 6-1, to capture the year's first triple crown event, the $150,000 Virginia Slims championship, for the fourth time.

Evert, who won her second Wimbledon and U.S. open titles last year, earned $50,000 for the victory to bring her winnings this season to $174,500.

Barker, the flower of Paignton, England, unnerved Evert in the first set when she broke her serve twice and forced Evert into several uncharacteristic errors.

Martina Navratilova defeated Rosie Casals, 8-5, in an eight-game pro set to take third place and $16,000.

Yankees sign two more

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — New York Yankees gave three-year contracts Sunday to relief-pitcher Sparky Lyle and outfielder Roy White, reducing the number of unsigned players on the American League champions' roster to five.

Lyle, who led the AL last season with 23 saves while compiling a 7-8 record and 2.26 ERA, will receive an estimated $400,000 over the three years. The 32-year-old left-hander, a nine-year veteran, had refused to pitch in any exhibition games until he signed a contract.

White, a 33-year-old switch-hitting leftfielder with a .274 lifetime batting average, will get an estimated $375,000 over three years. A 10-year veteran, White hit .286 last season, had 14 homers, drove in 65 runs and stole 31 bases.

The Yankees players still unsigned are first-baseman Chris Chambliss, pitcher Dock Ellis, outfielders Oscar Gamble and Gene Locklear and shortstop Marty Perez.

Marotte back

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Veteran defenceman Gilles Marotte has been recalled by St. Louis Blues of the National Hockey League because of injuries to Bob Plager and a suspension to Bob Gassoff. Marotte was assigned to Kansas City of the Central League earlier this season.

Canada whips West Germany in first world curling start

KARLSTAD, Sweden (CP) — Canada's Jim Ursel took a 9-3 triumph over West Germany in one of five opening-round games Monday night at the 10-country world curling championship.

Joining the Montreal rink at 1-0 were Scotland, Sweden, Switzerland and defending champion United States.

Bruce Roberts' Hibbing, Minn., rink overcame physical ailments affecting two of their members to get past France's Pierre Boan 8-5; while Ken Horton of Scotland defeated Denmark's Tommy Stjerne 7-5; Jon Carl Rizzi of Switzerland beat Norway's Kristian Sorum 7-5; and Ragnar Kamp of Sweden dropped Italy's Giuseppe Dal Molin 10-7.

The championship was opened by Sweden's King Carl Gustaf in a colorful ceremony that included 50 Swedish fiddlers and 100 folk dancers from the province of Varmland before a crowd of more than 3000 in the 3500-seat Farjestads Arena.

The Massed Pipes and Drums of the city of Winnipeg, which will play host to the event next year, entered ahead of the presidents of the curling associations of the competing countries.

Lennart Hemmingson, president of the 1977 organizing committee, welcomed curlers and fans to Karlstad before the Silver Broom, emblematic of the world championship, was brought into the arena.

The king shook hands with all members of the teams before officially declaring the competition open, the first time that duty has been performed by a sovereign. Swedish Curling Association president Bo Moller, threw the first stone, which was swept by the other national association presidents.

Second-round play today has Canada meeting Switzerland, the U.S. facing Norway, Sweden meeting France, Scotland facing West Germany and Italy opposing Denmark.

"We got kind of lucky in the first end really," Ursel said of his game against the lowly-regarded West Germans. "They missed a last-rock take-out and we stole two and were off to a good start.

"You're not really sure about the European teams — what kind of game they'll play. They were cleaning off rocks I didn't expect them to clean."

The U.S. foursome, boasting three members of the team that won the world title at Duluth, Minn., a year ago, was hard hit by medical problems and needed three in the 10th to beat France.

Skip Roberts came down with a head cold and second Gary Kleffman was suffering from an ear infection compounded by changing inner-ear pressure encountered on the flight from the U.S.

The Americans ran up a 4-0 lead through five ends before the Frenchmen, skipped by Boan in his seventh world title appearance, started to rally and tied it 5-5 with a single in the ninth. Third Peirre Duclos missed two open take-outs in the pressure-filled 10th, however, and Roberts ended up scoring three without throwing his last rock.

Statton, Playland quartets share bonspiel spotlight

Playland rinks reached four of the five finals in the Victoria Curling Club's silver anniversary bonspiel, and they won three of them.

Top honors went to a rink from the host club skipped by Wayne Statton, but Playland rinks skipped by Ray Benwell, Kelly Oulton and Bob Gallaugher prevailed in the C, D and E events, respectively.

Winner of the fifth event in the 96-rink bonspiel was a father-son Nanaimo rink skipped by Gene Koster.

Statton, who had former club president Pat Thompson as vice-skip and Frank Varga and Orville McGregor on the front end, had an easy time of it in the Times Event final. Catching Bruce Coulter's Playland foursome off form, the VCC rink ran up a 9-2 lead and concession came after the sixth end.

Koster, who was vice-skip for Don MacRae on the Nanaimo rink which won the Canadian seniors championship in 1970, had MacRae throwing lead rocks, Craig MacRae at second and Gord Loster as vice-skip in a change which came after a first-draw setback. It was an unbeaten march the rest of the way, and Totem Travel event honors came with a 7-6 win over a rink skipped by Bill Murray of Gilbert Plains, Man.

Benwell bested Gordie Hooey of the VCC in the C final; Oulton defeated Brad Clarke of the VCC in the D final, and a VCC rink skipped by Gordon Walker lost to Gallaugher in the E final.

No solution found for Olympic woes

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (UPI) — Delegates from the national Olympic committees of 81 nations split Monday over the issue of how to keep politics out of future Olympic Games.

Meeting for the first time since Montreal when 29 African countries walked out of the games on the instructions of their governments, the national Olympic committees were attempting to draft a new rule to define the relationship between a government and its country's Olympic athletes.

A spokesman for the committees said a compromise would have to be worked out for presentation later this week to the International Olympic Committee's nine-man executive board.

At stake is the IOC's rule which states that all national Olympic committees must be completely independent and autonomous and must resist all political pressure.

Several countries want the IOC to rewrite the rule so that governments can directly help their national Olympic committees financially and in other ways without giving the government control over its affairs and dictating its sports policy at the Olympics.

"We would be glad to accept government help but we must make sure governments do not control sportsmen and use them for political purposes as a result," said Walter Troeger, secretary general of the West German Olympic committee.

African delegates said the Montreal games had shown it was impossible for some national Olympic committees to act independently of their governments. It was therefore hypocritical of the IOC to expect them to be free. The rule, which was being broken all the time anyway, should be changed to a more realistic one, they said.

One last hurdle faces Saanich

Saanich Braves will be out to make it two B.C. Junior "B" hockey championships in a row when they travel to Quesnel this week for the best-of-three provincial final.

Braves, who defeated Prince George Spruce Kings last season for the title, had some problems on the weekend before eliminating Richmond Rebels in the best-of-three Pacific Coast final.

It took two goals in the third period Sunday to wrap up a 5-3 victory for the Island champions in the third game of a best-of-three series in Richmond.

Brent Patterson, who finished the series with five goals and two assists, scored the winning and insurance goal and was the individual standout for Saanich.

Ron Jobson, Scott Connors and Rob Coldwell also scored for the Braves, who trailed 2-1 after one period and went into the final 20 minutes at 3-3.

Saanich will have high-scoring Wayne Larsen, who was suspended for the Richmond series after drawing a match penalty in the Island final against Port Alberni, in uniform for the Quesnel games. Coach Bayden Robinson said Monday he may have defenceman Tom King, out with a bruised shoulder, available but defender Jim Storrie is out for the season as he has torn knee ligaments.

Quesnel defeated Kootenay-champion Castlegar in two straight games in the Interior final.

The provincial final starts Friday and continues Saturday and, if a third game is necessary, it will be played Sunday.

Advice of old pro helps Marsh win

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (UPI) — Although he won $185,000 last year and has 26 career victories, Australian Graham Marsh was little known to U.S. golf fans.

After all, all those victories were overseas and Marsh was just another first-year player on the PGA tour.

All that changed Sunday when Marsh took a one-stroke victory over Tom Watson in the $225,000 Heritage Golf Classic, collecting $45,000 for his first-ever American victory.

It was the second straight week Watson lost the lead in the late going. Watson, the leader after the second and third rounds of the Heritage, shot a three-over-par 74 Sunday for a four-day total of 274.

"I didn't do anything brilliant but I was very steady," said the 33-year-old Marsh, who had a two-under 69 Sunday for an 11-under 273 total.

He said the tournament showed the value of advice given to him several years ago by fellow-Australian Peter Thomson. Marsh said Thomsaon told him that a golfer who couldn't take the lead in early rounds should strive to be in second place.

"Peter Thomson was a great tactician and a student of the game," Marsh said. "He told me that sometimes, when you hang around the lead long enough and often enough, you are sometimes given the tournament."

The victory increased Marsh's winnings this year to $82,739 — third best on the PGA tour.

Marsh began play Sunday four strokes behind Watson, the winner of two tournaments earlier this year and number two in the money standings.

At the end of the first hole, Marsh had cut that lead in half by getting a birdie while Watson bogeyed. The two were tied at 10-under at the end of the front nine.

"I just had one of those days when I was in a good frame of mind," Marsh said. "It is really good to be able to do that when you begin the day four strokes behind."

Watson pulled out to a stroke lead when he birdied the 10th hole but disaster awaited him at the par-three 14th. Ironically, it was the same hole Marsh bogeyed Saturday when it appeared he had the momentum to catch Watson.

Watson's tee shot went into a lagoon in front of the hole and he had to settle for a double-bogey.

Marsh went into the final hole with a two-stroke margin. He missed the green with his second shot and faced the task of chipping to the green and one-putting to save par. Marsh, who did just that, said it was one of the tightest moments of the tournament for him.

"I had a feeling that Watson was going to birdie 18," he said. "I knew if I did not get it up and down in two I would have blown the tournament."

Watson did birdie 18 but that only brought him to within a stroke of Marsh.

Ben Crenshaw, who took a triple-bogey on the first hole, ended the day with a three-under-par 68 to take third place — three strokes behind Marsh.

Ray Floyd, who will be defending his Masters title in two weeks, finished in a tie for fourth with Gene Littler. Floyd fired a one-over 72 over the Harbour Town Golf links and Littler had a 65 to finish four strokes behind Marsh.

Jack Nicklaus helped design the course but it was no advantage to him. Nicklaus, who will skip the Greater Greensboro Open to practice for the Masters, had trouble with his putter throughout the tournament.

He finished in a tie with Gary Player and Ed Sneed — seven strokes behind Marsh.

Second world record set at Canadian meet

MONTREAL (CP) — Steve Pickell left some friends in Cleveland at 4 a.m. Sunday to catch a plane, arrived here and set a world swim record in a qualifying heat, rested two hours, then broke the record again in the final.

Pickells' achievements — he also won the 50-metre freestyle — provided a spectacular finale to the four-day Short Course Winter Nationals meet here.

The Vancouver native won the men's 100-metre butterfly event in 54.25 seconds, improving on the short course world record of 54.71 he set earlier in the day. Before Sunday, East Germany's Roger Pyttel held the record at 55.08.

Pickell,18 , who swims for the University of Southern California, missed the first three days of the meet to complete in the U.S. collegiate championships in Cleveland which wound up Saturday.

Travelling with several other Canadian swimmers who completed in the Cleveland meet, Pickell arrived mentally and physically exhausted from the collegiate championships.

"My only goal here was to swim four lengths of the butterfly," he admitted.

His world record was the second of the weekend. Stephen Badger set a world mark in the 400 freestyle Saturday in 3:51.50, erasing the old short-course mark of 3:53.27 held by Hungary's Zoltan Wlador.

Badger and three other swimmers — Susan Sloan of Stettler, Alta.; Shannon Smith of New Westminster,; and Robin Corsiglia of Pointe Claire, Que. — also set Canadian records Sunday.

Corsiglia, 14, put in an excellent performance to win the women's 200 breaststroke in 2:33.27, erasing Joann Baker's mark of 2:35.06.

Sloan, 18, who swims for the University of Arizona, won the women's 100 butterfly in 1:02.00, doing away with the record of 1:02.34 set by Halifax's Nancy Garapick.

Smith, 15, a bronze medalist at the Montreal Olympics, chopped more than three seconds off her own short-course record in winning the women's 800 freestyle in 8:41.17.

Badger, the transplanted Australian who attends the University of Manitoba, capped off an excellent meet by winning the 1500 freestyle in 15:29.12. That bettered the old Canadian record of 15:40.27 set last year by Vancouver's Michael Ker.

Sandra overcomes lapse, challenge

RANCHO SANTA FE, Calif. (UPI) — Sandra Palmer overcame a temporary lapse and a brief rush from Hollis Stacy to win the Civic Classic golf tournament by four shots Sunday with a seven-under-par 281.

Miss Palmer shot a two-over 74 in the final round to win the $22,500 first-place cheque and her first tournament of the year. Miss Stacy, who started the final round of the inaugural $150,000 event three shots behind, had a 75 for a 285 total and second-place money of $14,650.

Stacy took the lead at the third hole when Palmer started with a bogey, par, double bogey. But Palmer, who now has 18 LPGA wins, regained the lead at the eighth hole after Stacy bogeyed the 414-yard seventh par four.

Joanne Carner turned in the blustery day's best round with a 68 to claw her way into a tie for third with Jane Blalock at two-under 286 for the 72-hole tournament.

Three players finished at even par — Sandra Post, Beverly Klass, and first-round leader Jan Stephenson.

Judy Rankin, who had been after her third consecutive win of the four-tournament season, finished with a 74 and a three-over par 291, 10 shots behind the winner.

Penguin defenceman charged after brawl

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — A hearing will be held Thursday for Pittsburgh Penguins Defenseman Dennis Owchar, charged in connection with a weekend brawl that injured three persons.

Owchar, 23, was charged with disorderly conduct and obstructing justice and teammate Russ Anderson also was named in the brawl at a downtown apartment complex.

Officials said the fight began about 2 a.m. Saturday when Anderson allegedly punched a male guest and then hit Linda Hicks, 20, when she went to the man's aid during a birthday party in the party room of Cricklewood Hill apartments.

Police said Miss Hicks, a legal secretary, was knocked to the ground and a friend of Anderson's stomped on her chest.

Police said they were told by witnesses that three men then beat Miss Hicks. However, Anderson was not arrested, police said, because they did not see him breaking any laws.

Owchar, who lives in the Cricklewood, was arrested with Louis Paracca, 20, a student at Duquesne University, when they refused to leave the room where police found Miss Hicks "lying on a bed in a semi-conscious state." The officers had been asked to check a report that a girl was beaten.

Police said both men became disorderly and were arrested. Paracca also was charged with disorderly conduct and obstructing justice.

Miss Hicks was treated at hospital. Two men injured in the fracas — Jerome Parme jr., 19, and David Predebon, 20, both of Arnold, Pa. — were treated at hospital for a fractured nose, broken teeth and cuts over the eye.

Owchar was arraigned in city court and released on nominal bond pending the hearing.

Shoemaker records 696th stakes win

ARCADIA, Calif. (UPI) — Jockey Bill Shoemaker guided Habitony from last place to victory Sunday in the 40th running of the $199,000 Santa Anita Derby.

The Irish-bred Habitony as usual lagged far to the rear of the field of 15 until the final turn. There Shoemaker brought him between horses and in a prolonged stretch drive, he overhauled For The Moment to win by three lengths.

Steve's Friend was third and J. George finished fourth.

Habitony raced the 1 and one-eights miles in the good time of 1.48 1-5 and earned a purse of $131,000, richest in the history of the race.

Victory was another milestone for Shoemaker. It was his 7195th victory, his 696th stakes win and his 121st victory in a race worth $100,000 or more. Another record — it was his seventh Santa Anita Derby win. It was also his ninth stakes victory at the meeting to tie him with Fernando Toro in that department.

Hoop Bulls dash toward playoffs

By The Associated Press

Chicago Bulls' charge to the National Basketball Association playoffs continues in high gear.

The Bulls, who stumbled to a 2-14 record in the opening month of the season, reached a milestone on their comeback trail Sunday night when they beat the injury-riddled Cleveland Cavaliers 95-90 before a crowd of 19,757 at Chicago Stadium.

The victory, coupled with Kansas City Kings' 139-129 loss to the Spurs at San Antonio earlier Sunday, lifted the Bulls one-half game ahead of the Kings in the race for the sixth and final playoff berth in the Western Conference.

The Bulls have won 15 of their last 16 games and their current win streak is at eight games.

Elsewhere in the NBA Sunday, Detroit Pistons ,beat Houston Rockets 115-100; Boston Celtics trimmed New York Nets 114-109; New York Knicks defeated Washington Bullets 109-95; New Orleans Jazz nipped Indiana Pacers 119-118 in double overtime; Philadelphia 76ers topped Portland Trail Blazers, 128-116; Denver Nuggets defeated Golden State Warriors 115-109; and Los Angeles Lakers beat the Buffalo Braves 92-89.

Spanish leftists rally in bullring

MADRID (Reuter) — The first legal leftist political meeting in almost 40 years erupted with the singing of the Internationale and clenched-fist salutes in a packed bullring.

The whitewashed bullring in the Madrid suburb of Carabanchel was filled with red, yellow and purple flags of the Spanish Republicans and the red banners of socialism in the first rally of its kind since the Spanish civil war of 1936-39.

The stadium echoed to the shouts of "socialism and freedom," "amnesty" and "the people united will never be overcome."

Thousands of youngsters listening to pop music squatted peacefully on the sandy arena.

Outside, five civil guards in olive green uniforms smoked cigarettes — the only visible official protection at the meeting, organized by the small Marxist Popular Socialist Party.

The PSP is one of the 94 political groups legalized in advance of the promised first parliamentary elections since Gen. Francisco Franco's military uprising of July 18, 1936.

The crowd was comprised mostly of students, plus some shopkeepers and white-collar workers. Almost all the party leaders in the platform wore ties and suits, contrasting oddly with the deliberately informal aspect of their supporters.

For many people, this was the first chance to vent left-wing feelings.

A message of support from the still-illegal Spanish Communist party produced the loudest cheers and cries of "'Unity, unity." But the only show of real feeling was the storm of boos which greeted the mentions of the Popular Alliance, the right-wing party expected to poll a huge conservative vote.

One PSP speaker summed up the meaning of the rally: "This is the best proof we can give that it is possible to make the transition from dictatorship to democracy without violence. We Spaniards do not want any more wars."

At one stage the audience stood up to raise clenched fists in tribute to "victims of fascism" in Spain during the last 40 years.

We can be pals —Hanoi

HONG KONG (Reuter) — Phan Hien, Vietnamese vice-foreign minister has urged the United States to end its embargo policy against Vietnam so as to improve relations between the two countries, the Vietnam news agency has reported.

Hien told a news conference in Hanoi that Vietnam was willing to normalize relations with the United States "on the principles of respect for each other's independence and sovereignty, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality, mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence."

He said it was an "undeniable duty" for the United States to help heal the wounds of war and reconstruct post-war Vietnam.

Hien said the Vietnamese government would help in the search for Americans missing in Vietnam and return to the United States remains of Americans killed in the war, the agency reported.

Railwest subsidy issue also raised in house

Oakland's hopes still alive

Economic Development Minister Donald Phillips made no promises Monday but he indicated plans still were in the works to keep Victoria fish-packers Oakland Industries going.

Charles Barber (NDP—Victoria) had asked if the minister had any positive proposals to save the jobs of some 300 Oakland employees.

All Phillips would say that he was "sure we will be able to help further" without the jobs being lost.

Barber prefaced his question in the Legislature with a comment that business bankruptcy rates had increased by 86 per cent in B.C. during the first year of the Social Credit government.

Phillips didn't deny the statistics. He just said that Barber was obviously unaware how long "it takes a firm to go broke. Most of the 397 failures in 1976 started down the road to failure under the NDP," he said.

Phillips also came under fire from William King (NDP—Revelstoke-Slocan) who wanted to know what kind of subsidy the provincial government was prepared to offer Railwest, the B.C. Railway subsidiary the NDP built to manufacture the rail cars.

The same question was asked last week of Premier Bennett when Phillips was out of the house. At that time Bennett declined to give a specific figure, merely stating that no ceiling was placed on the subsidy offered. The federal government has offered a $5,000 a car subsidy.

Phillips referred the question Monday to Bennett as the man who "made the original statement." King and David Barrett (NDP—Vancouver East) taunted Phillips with shouts of "can't you recall" how much the subsidy was and suggested he try "a couple of martinis."

The taunts were references to testimony given by Phillips last week during a judicial inquiry into share trading involving the Grizzly Valley pipeline and gas treatment plant.

Phillips stated in answer to several questions regarding conversations with his former aide Arthur Weeks that he couldn't recall the incidents. He denied that he had told Weeks to "take a couple of martinis and relax" when Weeks first informed him of his share transactions.

When the question period was finally brought back to the matter of subsidies for rail cars, Bennett said his government was still "trying to pull the former government's chestnuts out of the fire." He said there was considerable concern about the Railwest plant. "It is hard to see the rationale for building the plant" in the first place," he said.

The manufacturing plant was built to solve a shortage of rail cars being experienced by B.C. Rail. It had been hoped that once the BCR backlog had been caught up the manufacturing plant would be able to win orders for rail cars from other railways.

So far the plant has been unable to win outside orders.

Bennett warned that keeping the plant alive would not be easy, although it was a top priority for his government. "There are three other plants with unemployment problems," he said.

The answer didn't satisfy King who shouted that the premier "won't answer and the minister of economic development is too stupid to answer" on the matter of subsidies.

Speaker Ed Smith ordered King to withdraw. "I have greater powers of recall (than the minister) and I withdraw," King snapped.

Macdonald loses on TV budget airing

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition parties have thwarted government attempts to provide live television and radio coverage of Finance Minister Donald Macdonald's budget speech in Parliament on Thursday night.

Macdonald asked for live coverage of the event and had planned a streamlined 30-minute speech of the government's latest tax and spending plans.

But Progressive Conservative and NDP critics are opposed, saying such coverage would give the government a chance to score political points at their expense.

Ralphe Goodale (L—Assinaboia), parliamentary secretary to Government House Leader Allan MacEachen, said Monday the budget speech will not be televised unless all parties agree.

There would be no live coverage unless there was a sudden reversal by parties opposed to the idea.

A finance department spokesman said the government has given up all plans for live coverage of the budget address to the Commons and opposition parties would be given their usual chance to reply.

NDP spokesman Derek Blackburn Brant said he would fight any government move to have the budget broadcast.

Live coverage would simply "give Macdonald a chance to dangle a few little goodies to a national TV audience." Viewers and listeners would switch channels when the NDP budget critic was given a chance to reply.

Blackburn, part of an eight-member committee led by Commons Speaker James Jerome studying the possibility of regular television coverage of the Commons and its committees, argued that Canadians receive complete budget coverage through newspapers and broadcast interviews held after the speech is read.

Conservatives are also opposed to the idea of live budget coverage on political grounds.

William Kempling (PC—Halton-Wentworth) told a recent television committee meeting that he did not know what budget coverage would prove.

Liberal committee member John Reid (Kenora Rainy River) urged the committee to grant Macdonald's request for live television and radio coverage. All parties would be given a half-hour of time during the show.

Barrett tosses Davis bait but ferry boss won't bite

Dave Barrett (NDP—Vancouver East) was at his mocking best Monday, but he couldn't get a rise out of Transport Minister Jack Davis.

"How many times can he (Davis) be kicked in the head and still be around?" Barrett asked in the Legislature. He was referring to last week's incident in which Premier Bennett persuaded Graeme Roberts of Nanaimo to remain on the B.C. Ferries board of directors after Roberts had submitted his resignation to Davis.

Roberts said he resigned originally because of Davis' dictatorial attitude at board sessions. In persuading him to stay on, Bennett said the board was still new (less than three months old) and would take some time to shake down.

Barrett described Bennett's intervention as "humiliating."

"This isn't a matter of right or wrong, but a question as to who's running the show," Barrett said. "How can the ferry workers have confidence in a man's who's pushed around."

He said it was obvious that Roberts had "more pull in cabinet than the minister."

And he asked the rhetorical question: "Do used-car dealers have priority over Rhodes scholars?"

Roberts is a cardealer, Davis a former Rhodes scholar.

Throughout the baiting, Davis smiled but did not respond.

Bennett readies controls for B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett has hinted that the provincial government will enact wage and price controls if the federal government ends its anti-inflation program.

In a speech to the Fraser Valley regional convention of the Social Credit party at the weekend, Bennett said it would be unfortunate if the federal government. dropped the controls this year.

If that happens and the provincial government decides that labor and management are not acting with restraint, "this government is prepared to move."

Bennett said removal of federal guidelines might result in chaos for B.C.

"The unemployment we see today will be nothing compared to what we will see if costs continue to escalate."

The premier also told about 200 party members at the convention that:

- British Columbians can look forward to some tax cuts if the provincial economy improves.
- It will be two years before the government calls the next election.
- The government plans to keep its promise of the last election to abolish property taxes for the elderly.

Search on for ancestral roots

Roots success precipitates interest

Genealogy craze hits Americans

The Christian Science Monitor

Like the tail of a comet, a flash of interest in genealogy has followed the book and TV success of Alex Haley's Roots, the black American author's search for his slave-era and African ancestors.

"We experienced a 50 per cent increase in visitors in February over a year ago," says Peggy Tuck Sinko, director of the impressive genealogical section at Chicago's private Newberry Library.

"The minute the cold weather broke, family history searchers started pouring in," says librarian Dorothy Lower of the Fort Wayne, Indiana public library, another highly regarded geneaological collection.

"Orders of microfilm records, the heart of our collection, have doubled in the last month," says Thomas E. Daniels, geneaological department spokesman for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The Mormon Church maintains the largest geneaological library in the world — nearly a million microfilm records and 150,000 volumes — with a staff of 600 experts at its Salt Lake City headquarters.

However, despite the current spurt of visible interest in geneaology a growing interest in the subject has been steadily building in America for at least a decade, most genealogy authorities agree.

Genealogy is generally regarded as second only to stamp and coin collecting as an American hobby.

"This is not a flash-in-the-pan phenomenon," says Mr. Daniels. "If you were to graph it, the present would appear as a bubble on a steady, steep incline in recent years. Five years ago, for instance, we had 1,100 visitors a day. Now we have over 2,000."

Among non-Haley causes for Americans' renewed interest in family roots:

● Bicentennial fallout. "Last year's bicentennial sparked a lot of interest in genealogy," says Miss Lower of the Fort Wayne library. "People wanted to learn whether they had soldiers in their family backgrounds." A similar pickup in genealogical study followed the 1876 centennial, historians say.

● A postwar pattern. "Growth in the study of genealogy has been continuous since the early 1960s," says James D. Walker, genealogy director for the National Archives in Washington., Two similar intense periods of genealogical study occurred earlier in American history, Walker observes — in the 1880s and 1930s. The three study phases to date have followed major wars by about 20 years, he says.

● Reaction to the stress of the 1960s. "The 1960s were a turbulent period," says James B. Bell, director of the New England Historic Genealogical Society. "Political involvements such as the Vietnam War did not make sense. People needed to find their place on the tie line of history to seek their place in family and local history."

● Leisure and affluence. "Many people get into genealogy later in life," says Gilbert McNamee, director of the Bay Area Reference Center, near San Francisco. "There's more money now — and with earlier retirements people have more time."

"We're swamped with visitors in the summertime," says Miss Lower at the Fort Wayne library. "People of all ages come from all over the country to spend their vacations here doing family research."

National Archives genealogist Walker notes a similar vacation hobby trend, as Americans make trips to what he calls the Washington genealogical mecca — the resources held by the Library of Congress, National Archives, the Daughters of the American Revolution Headquarters, and the National Genealogical Society.

News for wine fanciers.

Now, however, B.C. wine fanciers have the opportunity to experience Rodet quality at first hand. For Rodet's illustrious Côtes Du Rhone is gradually making its appearance on the shelves of B.C. liquor stores.

The classic Côtes Du Rhone is a full bodied red, with a forthright flavour that sides well with roast beef, steak and other hearty foods. And Rodet Côtes Du Rhone splendidly exemplifies these characteristics.

Try Rodet Côtes Du Rhone soon. A few bottles in your cellar or cabinet will stand you in good stead when company arrives, or when you feel like turning an everyday meal into an occasion.

Bagels: Polish invention has reaped multimillions

LOS ANGELES — It's no joke — the Poles are believed to have invented the bagel. Furthermore, it has grown to a multimillion-dollar industry.

And if those bits of trivia aren't overwhelming, consider this over a morning cup of coffee: to create the perfect bagel it must be both boiled and baked.

The bagel achieves its glossy exterior because it is sprayed with water prior to baking. Unlike doughnuts, which are formed by punching out the centre, bagels are pressed into shape, which explains the irregular shape of the centre hole.

Less than 20 years ago, bagels were little known outside of Jewish communities. New York, for instance, had about 40 neighborhood bakeries which produced them. But with the advent of "Flash frozen" baked goods which could be shipped long distances without preservatives, the bagel was introduced in 1962 to supermarkets across the nation.

Murray Lender, son of the founder of what has become the largest bagel bakery in the United States, says about 80 per cent of the small, hard, crusty rolls are now sold to non-Jewish customers.

The West Coast represents about 15 per cent of the total sales, but the bulk of the market is still in New York.

Lender's built the first automated bagel bakery in 1965 to mass-produce the bread product.

"We are specialty bakers," Lender said here on a recent promotional trip, "and the specialists are thriving because of the trend for hearth-baked bread products and away from sweets and high caloric foods."

Lender denies that his product is fattening.

"The average bagel contains 160 calories," he says. "It isn't the bagel that's fattening. It's the stuff people put on it," notably butter, lox and cream cheese.

It is Lender's firm which has researched the history of the bagel, although he admits the background is hazy — and perhaps apocryphal.

According to Lender, hordes of turkish invaders tried to enter Vienna in 1683, but were driven off by the armies commanded by John Sobiesky, of Poland. Thousands of sacks of green coffee were part of the booty left behind by the fleeing Turks, and a Polish adventurer, familiar with Italian coffeehouses, asked for and received the unroasted beans.

This man founded the first Viennese coffeehouse and, with his coffee, served small, half-moon-shaped breads called Kipfel. Following his victory, Sobiesky marched triumphantly through the streets, and the grateful citizens clung to his horse's stirrups in admiration. The enterprising coffeehouse owner reshaped his Kipfel to resemble the king's stirrup and called it beugel, the German word for stirrup.

Woodwork aids offenders

VANCOUVER (CP) — Hotplate holders may help keep hard-core juvenile offenders out of hot water.

A woodworking shop which is producing wooden plaques in the thousands for chain stores here is called an "alternate school" by its founder.

Bozo Lalich started the workshop to give employment to out-of-work Skid Road inhabitants, but he sees it as becoming a retraining centre of juvenile offenders.

"This is a start ... my dream for the centre will take a long time, but this is a start," Lalich said in an interview.

Lalich bought woodworking equipment and lumber with a small business loan from a bank. He employs 11 people to make the plaques, which have an Indian motif on them.

The woodworkers maintain a regular eight-hour shift. Part-time workers are paid $3 an hour and full-time $4.

The workshop is a microcosm of the re-training centre Lalich pictures running in the future. He calls it an alternate school.

"It will be based on new learning experiences," he said.

He wants to take the rougher juvenile element from the courts and the prisons and train them to become self-sufficient.

Music links Peking, Bonn

TOKYO (AP) — Chinese music-lovers packed the People's Cultural Hall in Peking and gave a "tumultuous ovation" Saturday night to Beethoven's Fifth Symphony played by the Peking Central Orchestra, the Japanese news agency Kyodo reported.

In a dispatch from the Chinese capital, Kyodo says this was the first public performance of Western classical music by a Chinese orchestra since the 1965-69 Cultural Revolution that branded Western music "bourgeois" and "decadent."

It says Li Te-lun, who studied music in Germany, received "ear-splitting" applause when he entered the hall to conduct the orchestra on the 150th anniversary of Beethoven's death.

The symphony program was not published in advance, Kyodo says, but the news spread by word of mouth among music lovers, who rushed to buy tickets. Kyodo says the performance was also on television.

In Bonn, West Germany, Beethoven's birthplace, his bronze face frowned down on a dozen students as they entwined 6,000 flowers around his Minister Square memorial to mark the anniversary.

Aside from the statue's austere countenance, the market area was a happy place as modern and classical music filled the air and a throng of West Germans and foreigners jammed the streets for the celebrations.

Elsewhere in the city, the West German president placed a wreath in the room where Beethoven was born and the Bonn mayor placed flowers at the grave of the composer's mother in the Old Cemetery. Indoor and outdoor concerts of Beethoven's music were scheduled.

Beethoven lived and studied music in Bonn until 1787, but he produced his greatest works after he moved to Vienna. Nonetheless, Bonn considers itself the City of Beethoven and there are signs of its favorite son all over — even to the chocolate and marzipan cookies bearing his lifeness that were on sale in bakeries.

A dress shop window featured a ceramic copy of a mask made on Beethoven's face while he was still living.

Like the Minsiter Square statue and most portraits of Beethoven, the mask shows the frown worn by the composer in his later years as his hearing failed and he labored to produce his music.

. . . rich resources

Seabeds private goal

TOKYO (UPI) — The United States is determined to give private enterprise a role in mining the mineral wealth of the world's seabeds, according to Elliot Richardson, U.S. ambassador at large for sea law negotiations.

He said international control over harvesting rich resources of copper, nickel, manganese and cobalt from the ocean floor would be the crucial item when the 150 nation conference on Law of the Sea opened its sixth session in New York in May.

"The seabed should be a common heritage of mankind. An international authority should control access by mining companies," Richardson said.

CRTC hearings in fall

Multilingual TV near?

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission will hold public hearings this fall to decide whether there should be multilingual television stations.

The broadcasting regulatory agency said Monday it received an application from Multilingual Television (Toronto) Inc. for a multilingual station in Toronto to broadcast on the ultra-high frequency spectrum.

The CRTC is considering allowing television stations to broadcast exclusively in one or more languages other than English or French.

Some stations now carry a limited volume of third-language programming but there are no exclusively multilingual stations.

The hearings will be held in Toronto starting Sept. 20. The CRTC said anyone interested in making written submissions should do so by June 1.

To date the CRTC has not licensed television stations specifically to provide service in a language other than English or French.

Multilingual radio stations are operating in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver among other centres, and several cable television systems have multilingual community program channels. Some multilingual programs are available on 80 radio stations and 10 television stations across the country.

The CRTC said the hearings will enable the agency to set policy on whether to license stations for third-language service.

The hearings will explore such issues as the demand for the service, its cost, whether the stations should be allowed to sell advertising and how Canadian content regulations should be applied.

Chaplin
. . . book on wife

Chaplin, 88, sports blue Rolls

VEVEY, Switzerland (UPI) — Charles Chaplin has bought a new Rolls-Royce Silver Shadow — in his favorite color of blue — for his 88th birthday April 16.

But Sir Charles, confined to the wheelchair in which he was knighted by Queen Elizabeth in 1976, uses the limousine only an hour a day, according to a new book about the actor and his 34-year marriage to Oona O'Neill, daughter of playwright Eugene O'Neill who became Chaplin's fourth wife in 1943.

The book, Charlie and Oona, the Story of a Marriage, was written by Frederick Sands.

Chaplin's day at the large mansion above Vevey on Lake Geneva begins at 7:30 a.m.

Oona and Chaplin's valet bathe and dress him and take a special elevator down to the dining room for a breakfast of coffee, orange juice, bacon, eggs and toast.

Oona read the mail for Chaplin, according to the book.

At precisely 11:30 a.m., the new Rolls pulls up and Chaplin is wheeled by Oona to the car to go into town and buy all the English-language newspapers and magazines available.

Burt sick at being type-cast

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Actor Burt Reynolds says he's proved his versatility in 21 years as an actor but still has a problem.

"All I get is scripts in the tradition of James Bond or about a good ol' Southern boy," he said.

"If I have to play one more redneck, I may committ harikari."

Reynolds was here filming Semi-Tough, a movie based on the popular book about football players whose successes and failures are not necessarily limited to the football field.

"I need to stretch a little bit as an actor," Reynolds said. "But no one wants to offer me anything but jumping around in a car and doing donuts around the courthouse."

Since no one else is offering him the kind of roles he wants, Reynolds said he soon will both act in and direct a black comedy called The End about a man who believes he is dying.

Canadians miss Irish prizes

TORONTO (CP) — No Canadians held tickets on the top three horses in the Irish Sweeps Lincoln Handicap run Saturday at Doncaster, England. The race was won by Blustery. Fluellen finished second and Miss Filbert was third.

Ottawa hit on pay-TV

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta will oppose Ottawa's claim to control pay television at the private two-day federal-provincial communications meeting which opens today.

Allan Warrack, Alberta minister responsible for communications policy, telephones and utilities, said he viewed Ottawa's claim as part of the federal government's "rather rapid centralization of powers" in Ottawa at the expense of the provinces.

And Alberta has a "rather considerable empathy" with Quebec's frustration at trying "to control their own destiny" when faced with this growing centralization of power in Ottawa, Warrack said in an interview.

He made the comments as communications ministers, with the exception of Quebec's, headed to Edmonton for their first meeting since a 1973 federal-provincial communications conference marred by antagonistic squabbling.

No resolutions to nagging communications issues arose from that conference marred by antagonistic squabbling.

No resolutions to nagging communications issues arose from that conference, except to agree to hold another meeting.

Louis O'Neill, Quebec cultural affairs minister, said he was boycotting the Edmonton meeting because talking to Ottawa would only add credibility to its claim to have the right to control communications matters; such as broadcasting, cable television and pay TV.

Saskatchewan and Ontario also staunchly oppose Ottawa's assumption to have the right to control pay TV and its introduction.

Ottawa acknowledges it could be argued the federal government only has the right to control certain types of pay-TV systems.

If a system is completely closed-circuit, then a case could be made that pay TV is within provincial jurisdictions, federal communications officials have said.

But if any part of the pay-TV system is broadcast over the airwaves instead of being transmitted by wires, then it is an extension of broadcasting which the federal government has a constitutional right to control, say officials.

The hitch is that a completely closed circuit pay-TV system would be far more costly to set up and run.

Saskatchewan is installing a type of closed-circuit system in that province as a result of its communications fights with Ottawa.

M. V. Chesnut's Garden Notes

Seems to me there is a tendency on the part of the male gardener, growing vegetables in an effort to beat the high cost of living, to work at cross purposes with what his wife wants for her kitchen use.

I'll grant you that it does something for the ego to grow vegetables just a bit bigger than the fellow's next door — gargantuan marrows, onions the size of a grapefruit, yard-long runner beans and a cabbage which has to be transported to the kitchen door in a wheelbarrow.

I doubt very much, however, if these are the qualities that impress the busy housewife.

She wants vegetables from the garden, of course. Nothing delights her more than to have freshly-picked lettuce and radishes, cucumbers and green onions for the daily salad, and peas and beans which haven't become limp and tired in the shops.

But she wants them young and small and delicate. She wants those delicious baby carrots which are such a joy to cook or to eat raw, so sweet and crisp.

She wants a small, richly flavored onion that will lend just that touch of pungency to the delectable dishes she enjoys preparing.

She wants tender, golf-ball-size beets which will melt in the mouth, not those gigantic, woody specimens with hard spots all through them.

The beans she likes are crisp and firm, picked long before the seeds have made them bulgy and the skins have become stringy. They should be tender when tasted raw, yet brittle when broken — hence the term snap beans.

The famous petit pois of France — peas not much bigger than BB shot, and an epicure's delight — are only ordinary garden peas picked while they are still babies.

Another thing — she doesn't like waste, especially in these days of high food prices. She knows from experience that half a cabbage, left over from a specimen too big to be eaten in one meal, will lose most its flavor and almost all of its vitamins before it gets used up.

When half a big onion has been added to the stew, the rest may as well go into the garbage can, for no matter how well you wrap it the ghost of a cut onion in the fridge is sure to reappear in the butter.

Gluts will always pose problems for the novice vegetable gardener. Monstrous quantities of tomatoes all "turning in" at the same time, engulfing tides of head lettuce, dozens of zucchini squash, all make for domestic disharmony.

To be the white-haired boy around your house, then, practice some moderation in your sowings, growing a little of a lot — not too much of any one thing at any one time, and in a wide variety.

Succession sowing, so as to maintain a steady trickle of the most desired vegetables to the kitchen, is a must. And above all, pick 'em young and tender. For an added measure of popularity, wash and trim your vegetables before you deliver them proudly to the kitchen door.

One vegetable we grow every year in our garden — sowing only a dozen or so seeds every week — is a radish called Burpee White. It isn't the only radish we grow, nor is it necessarily the best, but it is especially valued because its leaves are as much of a delicacy as its bulbous roots.

I discovered this accidentally when I absent-mindedly picked and chewed on a leaf. It has a delicate, creamy, mustardy flavor, very good chopped into a mixed green salad or steamed and served as you would spinach.

The radishes themselves have pure white skins and flesh, almost round, crisp and tender and with a mild flavor when young but becoming somewhat pithy, like all radishes, when left in the ground too long.

They are at their best when about an inch in diameter, which takes about 28 days.

Jack Smith

A brochure I received in the mail the other day from something called the Metasource Research Institutte invites my wife and me to sign up for any of several seminars in which we may be able to regress to one or more of our previous lives.

"Who were you in 1432?" it asks. "See your own past lives in a special two-day hypnotic regression seminar. You may find yourself back in the early 15th century as a soldier in the final decades of the Hundred Years war, a follower of Joan of Arc or a nursemaid to England's infant king.

"Or you might find yourself in ancient Egypt, in Rome during the time of Christ or on the American frontier. Whatever the time period, you will see your own past lives in vivid detail . . ."

From a careful reading of the brochure I am sure it was meant to be taken literally, that we are all reincarnated from previous life or lives, and that by attending one of the institute's seminars and submitting to hypnosis by an "author, hypnotist and psychic researcher" named Dick Sutphen, we can uncover one or more of our previous lives and thus, somehow, improve our present chances for happiness and success.

The seiminars are being held in nine American cities, most of them rather interesting places to be, such as San Francisco, Seattle, New York, Montreal and Las Vegas, and will end with a finale in Scottsdale that is to last seven days and cost $275 a person or $525 a couple. It seems to me that anyone who can afford to pay $275 just to regress is already successful, or at least affluent, if not happy. On the other hand, $525 a couple isn't exorbitant for a week in Scottsdale, and I imagine there would be other things to do besides regress.

I wouldn't mind spending a week in Scottsdale myself. What would worry me, though, was that I might regress and find myself, as the brochure suggests, a soldier in the Hundred Years War. That would certainly spoil the week for me. I have always thanked my stars that I wasn't born in the age of chivalry. I simply wouldn't have been able to walk about in a suit of armor, or lift a broadsword without using both hands, the way Jimmy Connors hits his forehand. While I am athletic and clever, not to say crafty, I have never had brute strength, being an ectomorph, and the life expectancy of an ectomorph at the battle of Agincourt, for example, must have been about 19 seconds.

In fact medieval life was so hard, I imagine, that I could have made a living only as an ecclesiastic or a court jester, and in the one role I would very likely have been burned at the stake as a heretic, and in the other one lost my head as a fool.

Even if I did turn out to have been a soldier, I would of course have been English, and if I had survived Agincourt, by hiding in the woods perhaps, it would have been just my luck to be sent into the fray against Joan of Arc at Orleans, only to find out she was my wife. After all, if my wife is a reincarnation too, there's no reason why she couldn't have been the Maid of Orleans herself. She has the character and the strength, and she is French; and I wouldn't care to cross swords with her.

Perhaps I was an ecclesiastic after all. I am crafty enough to have kept my heresy a secret. I would of course have been English, and not French; otherwise, why would my daughter-in-law laugh when I try to pronounce such common French phrases ts Champs - Elysees and au revoir? If I was an ecclesiastic I might have sat on the court that tried Joan of Arc and sent her to the stake. Can you imagine how depressing it would be in the midst of a happy week in Scottsdale, to find out that you had burned your wife — as a heretic — when actually you were the heretic and she was a saint?

I am a lot warmer to the possibility of regressing to ancient Egypt, as the brochure suggests. If I could have been anyone I wanted to be in that era I'd want to have been Marc Antony, not when he was fighting, of course, but when he was floating down the Nile with Cleopatra on her barge. Oh, comfort me with apples!

As for the American frontier, it holds no appeal for me. Frontier life was cold, lonely and mean. People lived hard and died young and never took a shower. I'd rather regress to contemporary New York City.

If I had my choice, though, and could regress to any particular place and time in history, I believe I'd choose an April night in the 1890's, when I was a young English divinity student on holiday from Oxford, entertaining myself on the Continent with a debauch at the Moulin Rouge, swilling champagne, engaging in glittering persiflage with Toulouse-Lautrec and the other habitues, listening to the exhilarating music of Offenbach and watching my wife do the can-can. For she could very well turn out to be Jane Avril. Yes, there must have been an exact moment, one of those nights at the Moulon Rouge, when western civilization reached its zenith.

On the other hand it would be just our luck that my wife would turn out to be the infant English king's nursemaid, after all; and I don't intent to lay out $525 to spend a week in some motel room at Scottsdale wiping little Henry's nose.

All things considered, I think I'll just regress where I am.

Sydney Harris

It is 5-4 in Borg's favor in the second set of the Pepsi Grand Slam tennis tournament. Borg has won the first set, 6-4, and now has a triple match point on Connors. This means he has three consecutive chances to win the set, the match, and the $100,000 first prize.

On one point, Borg hit wide. On another, he was aced. Nothing to do about that. But it was the third point that really hurt. The ball dropped easily on Borg's side of the net. The whole court was open — any shot by Borg would have won the match. A child could have made it.

But Borg planted his feet, moved into the backhand stroke, and came up short. The ball hit the tape and rolled back near his feet. "It was unbelievable," Borg said. "Before I made that shot, I said — 'this is easy' — and then I missed it!"

And a million hackers like myself, watching this tense competition on TV, were swept with a deep wave of empathy. We knew exactly how Borg felt — it had happened to us countless times. But that one of the two greatest players in the world could falter and flub in the same way gave us a keener realization that, despite our disparate skills, we are all more alike than we are different.

There is an ancient platitude in tennis — and perhaps in other sports as well — that the hard shots are easy, and the easy shots are hard. This has nothing to do with their technical execution, and everything to do with one's state of mind.

A hard fast shot gives you no time to think. And thinking can be fatal in a reflexive activity. Players are at their best when they respond automatically, before there is time for the cerebral cortex to start whirring. In an auto accident, it is the fastest reflexes that get you out of trouble, not the conscious thinking process.

On a slow easy shot — as every duffer knows — the mind impedes the nervous system, intervenes between the event and the response. Borg's thought, "This is easy," disturbed the reflex, ruined the timing, and spoiled a baby-shot.

The same is true in esthetic endeavors as in athletic ones. A poor pianist plays the keys. An adequate pianist plays the notes. But a good pianist plays the music; he thinks no more about the keys or the notes than a good typist is aware of the typewriter keys. The hands seem to be playing by themselves, short-circuiting the conscious mind.

We have lately become aware of the two "hemispheres" of the brain: one half rational and linear and logical, the other half intuitive and metaphorical. This is the part that still needs developing, even in Borg.

James Bacon's Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD — When the hunters up in Newfoundland clubbed the baby seals for their precious skins, they had to also deal with Yvette Mimieux.

Yvette left the set of her NBC-TV pilot movie The Busters on the last day of shooting and immediately joined other members of the International Fund for Animal Welfare for the trip to St. Anthonys, Newfoundland.

Yvette and the others placed themselves between the hunters and the baby seals.

Princess Grace of Monaco is another celebrity very much opposed to this slaughter.

George Jessel saw Network and said he counted about 150 four-letter words used in the movie that is favored to win the Oscar as best picture.

"Ten years ago, I was working on a cruise ship and just said one. I was fired and dropped off at the next port-of-call," says George.

George says the same cruise ship is now advertising Network as one of its movies for a cruise.

Carol Connors, the Oscar-nominated composer and lyricist for Gonna Fly Now from Rocky, and her amour, David Janssen, have written seven songs together — and sold four.

Latest is the PBS project Breaking Free, in which lyricist Ayn Robbins also collaborated.

Carol and David make beautiful music together.

Chuck Barris of The Gong Show and The Dating Game sent Carol a voodoo charm that is touted to scare off her Oscar competition.

But Chuck wants it back to use for renewal of The Gong Show.

NEW HOMES FROM $63,440

A quiet, close to town subdivision — 3 cul-de-sacs to choose from — no-through streets. Not the typical feeling — some level lots, others with lake views or look over surrounding area. Some nestled into trees just like living in the country, yet 5 minutes from town. These homes are priced to sell and going quickly. Consider some of these extra features:
—rockwork faced entries, concrete drives —carpeted entry lobbies to most —daylite basements — easy to develop that extra 4th bdrm, party-room or second full bath
—many have 2 finished rock-faced fireplaces
—fancy wallpapers, extra finishing.
—walk to busline, shops, all schools.
Prices from $63,440 up to $69,750 and two unique 1½-storey homes nearing completion at $78,900. Low down payments possible to qualified purchasers. Vendor may carry a second mortgage. Interest rates 10 to 10¾%.

The thief sawed a hole in the roof and entered the pet store by rope ladder to make off with Rover, who knows two phrases: Hi baby and tickle, tickle, tickle.

Observers searched in court

Two plainclothes RCMP officers checked spectators Monday afternoon before a preliminary hearing was scheduled to start before Judge William Ostler in Victoria provincial court.

The policemen spoke to the few spectators after producing their identification and then took seats at the back of the courtroom, near the door.

Crown counsel Richard Anthony said the precautionary move was taken after police learned of the possibility of a shotgun being taken into the courtroom.

The only case scheduled in the afternoon was the third day of a preliminary hearing of charges of armed robbery and possession of a weapon dangerous to the public peace against 18-year-old Peter Michael Legault and 19-year-old Dennis Richard Legault of 1235 Balmoral and 26-year-old Robert George Walton, who is at present in custody. Walton is also facing a separate charge of possession of stolen property.

574 die as two 747s collide

—AP

Blackened wreckage is tomb of 248 people aboard KLM jumbo jet

SANTA CRUZ DE TENERIFE, Spain (UPI) — Spanish officials said Monday a misunderstanding involving the American and Dutch pilots of two Boeing 747s and the airport control tower might have caused the crash that killed 574 people — history's worst aviation disaster.

Spanish newspapers said air control conditions at the Tenerife airport were unsafe. One said it was "a disaster that could be seen coming."

It was a disaster that likely would never have happened had not the Canary Island Liberation Movement — a group that wants the mid-Atlantic islands severed from Spanish rule — planted a bomb in the terminal at Las Palmas airport that exploded earlier Sunday...

The blast, which injured eight people caused both the chartered 747s to be diverted to Santa Cruz airport.

Casualty counts varied. The Dutch KLM airlines and Pan American World Airways issued revised casualty lists putting the number of dead at 574 with 68 survivors. Earlier, the Spanish government put the death toll at 562 with 72 survivors.

KLM said all 248 persons aboard its jet — none of them known to be Canadians — were killed.

The Dutch plane, roaring down the runway at 186 miles an hour on takeoff, ripped through the U.S. jet Sunday afternoon and both planes burst into flames. The heat was so intense that the runway asphalt melted.

Pan Am said 326 persons died aboard its plane, which originated in San Francisco, and 70 survived.

One survivor, Jordan Tartikoff of San Francisco, said the speeding KLM 747 already had lifted off the ground when it hit the Pan Am plane.

"The other plane was off the ground," Tartikoff said. "If it had not been, we would all have been hamburger meat. The other plane hit the top of our plane. He had definitely already lifted off."

Insurance experts in New York and London said the insurance and legal liability bill from the collision will exceed $250 million. A U.S. Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said it might take years to determine who has ultimate responsibility for the crash.

A controversy raged over the cause of the disaster. The Spanish news agency Cifra reported the Pan Am pilot may have misunderstood control tower directions and instead of turning into a parking area moved onto a runway in front of the KLM jet.

Pan Am issued a statement in New York denying the Cifra report.

Some foreign pilots suggested there had been a misunderstanding involving the two pilots and the control tower and that the radioed English language directions had been too heavily Spanish accented to be entirely clear.

'It just drove into us'

VANCOUVER (UPI) — The sole Canadian survivor of collision of two Boeing 747 jetliners in the Canary Islands spoke to a reporter by telephone Monday from his hospital bed in Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Spain.

"I was one of the lucky ones," Roy Tanemura of Kelowna said in the telephone interview. "Things happened so fast. We didn't see anything because of the fog . . . It was so foggy we couldn't see it coming. The Dutch plane just drove right into us."

Tanemura escaped with an injured ankle.

His wife, Aya, and travelling companions Dr. Walter and Yvonne Mitchell, also of Kelowna, did not survive. Elizabeth Caza of Windsor, Ont., was also listed among the dead on the Pan-Am plane.

Tanemura, a member of a land survey firm, said he scrambled through the ruptured fuselage of the plane believing his wife was right behind him.

"She didn't come with me," he said. "I guess she couldn't make it up and get out."

Community loses 28 friends

LAGUNA HILLS, Calif. (UPI) — The aviation disaster in the faroff Canary Islands shocked residents of the wealthy retirement community of Leisure World south of Los Angeles: Twenty-eight of their friends and neighbors died aboard the Pan American 747.

A group of 35 residents were on a tour. Only seven survived.

"It's very sad, very tragic," said Barbara Farley, city editor of the Leisure World News, a weekly newspaper distributed in the community.

"We've had a lot of calls and people have been coming into the office to ask about their friends."

Gardom seeking solution

No place to hold disturbed teens

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Monday his "inherited problem" of what to do with mentally disturbed juveniles was under study but that answers were not easy to find.

Gardom was answering questions asked in the Legislature by Conservative leader Scott Wallace (Oak Bay) who wanted to know why the provincial government couldn't provide adequate holding areas for youngsters with serious mental problems.

Wallace referred to the case of a 16-year-old youth who murdered a 10-year-old girl in Vancouver and had so far had his sentence deferred six times because there were no facilities for him in the province.

He also referred to the suicide of a 16-year-old girl in a Courtenay jail. She had been placed in an RCMP cell because there was nowhere else to hold her.

Gardom agreed that facilities for youngsters with psychiatric problems were inadequate, but he added that he wasn't sure whether the problem belonged to him or Health Minister Robert McClelland.

The attorney-general told the Legislature that the 16-year-old girl who hanged herself in Courtenay was a runaway from a foster home. She was picked up by the RCMP on March 16 after admitting being responsible for a series of tire-slashing incidents.

Routine checks were made with welfare officials and the probation officer and it was agreed that she should be held by the RCMP pending her court appearance, Gardom said.

She was placed in the cells at about 5:30 p.m. and had been visited by a matron every 20 minutes, Gardom said. She was found hanged at 1 a.m.

A three-tired program to fight juvenile crime did not include facilities for disturbed youngsters, the attorney-general told Wallace.

Woman, 21, acquitted in baby kidnap

SURREY (CP) — Rena Marie Conley, 21, of Hayward, Calif., was acquitted Monday in provincial court on a charge of kidnapping a two-week-old baby in September, 1976, from this Vancouver suburb.

Judge W. S. Selbie said the prosecution had not presented conclusive evidence to show Conley knew she was involved in a kidnapping.

Conley was charged, along with Sandra Ann Hanoum, 25, also known as Sandra Ann Gillen with kidnapping Cameron David Green and taking him to California.

Hanoum, also from Hayward, currently is fighting extradition to Canada in a San

Unemployment insurance bill

Controversial debate slapped with closure

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced plans Monday to invoke closure, used fewer than 30 times since Confederation, to limit debate and force second reading of a controversial bill that will tighten the qualifying standards for unemployment insurance.

After introducing a motion in the Commons to restrict debate to only five hours, Manpower Minister Bud Cullen told reporters "a majority government should be able to get its legislation through."

"Why should we be subject to the tyranny of a minority?"

MPs from high unemployment areas, including members of the governing Liberals, have vehemently opposed a proposal to increase the qualifying period for benefits to 12 weeks.

A person now must work eight weeks out of the previous 52 to qualify for benefits.

Cullen told the Commons he will introduce a motion today to set the time allocation. The motion itself can be debated for two hours.

He said there already has been adequate debate on the bill, which has been discussed in the Commons 13 hours and five minutes on four sitting days.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, immediately attacked the closure move as "a clear indication that the government plans to go ahead with a bill that will deprive thousands of Canadians of benefits, partic-

Sea turns tables on 'harnessing' ship

When it was built in Victoria 10 years ago, the federal oceanographic ship Vector was described as an important part of the international commitment "to harness the sea."

Last Thursday the tables were turned in Quatsino Sound when the sea — or part of it — harnessed the Vector.

The 130-foot vessel, which has been used for scientific studies, ran aground and had to be towed free. Federal officials made no public report of the incident and were not in a position to furnish details Monday.

Quatsino Sound cuts deeply into the northwest part of Vancouver Island.

The Vector was towed to the Victoria shipyards of Yarrows Ltd., during the weekend and will undergo close examination today to determine the extent of bottom damage.

Striking against AIB

Montreal millers defy work order

MONTREAL (CP) — Striking workers at three Montreal-area flour mills have voted to continue a walkout despite temporary injunctions issued by Superior Court Monday ordering them to return to work, said a union official.

The workers voted at a meeting Monday to continue their walkout which began eight weeks ago to protest an average 40-cent-an-hour wage rollback ordered by the federal Anti-Inflation Board.

The injunctions, effective immediately and covering a seven-day period, affect 400 workers at Ogilvy Flour Mills Ltd., Robin Hood Multi-Foods Ltd. and Maple Leaf Mills Ltd.

Carl Masson, an official of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, with which the strikers are affiliated, said that if the injunctions are defied, the union could face fines of up to $50,000 a day and its members up to $5,000 a day.

Robin Hood management told the court that the strike had cost the company $1.7 million and that perishable raw materials and finished products worth a further $1.8 million were in danger of decay and contamination.

The three companies are to appear in court next week seeking permanent injunctions.

Meanwhile, a fourth company, Phoenix Mills Ltd., is to petition for a temporary injunction against its 100 striking workers in Superior Court Wednesday.

Bread is available in Montreal despite the strike because flour has been imported from the United States and from neighboring provinces.

Houston chambers buzzing over sawmill

Hostile council blocks mayor

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist Reporter

Basil Studer is a man with a problem.

He's mayor of Houston, B.C., a town of 2,500 people between Prince George and Prince Rupert.

Studer's problem isn't so much that he's mayor of a small community which is struggling for financial survival much like any other B.C. municipality.

His trouble is that he's facing a six-member council which is hostile toward him and his plan What's more, the town hall staff refuses to give him a key to his office, and he's being denied access to municipal files. When Studer had to go to Victoria on municipal business, his council refused to pick up the tab and told him if he wanted to go he should do so as a private citizen.

Studer said in an interview in Victoria Monday that he had no idea what he was letting himself in for when he decided to run for mayor of Houston in last November's municipal election.

His reason for running was a proposal to lift 304 acres of farmland from the agricultural reserve to accommodate a sawmill, half a mile from the centre of town.

"Categorically opposed" was his campaign slogan and when the results were in, Studer had beaten his opponent two to one. He's serving the unexpired portion of the former mayor, Jack Kempf, now Social Credit MLA for Omineca.

Studer's troubles began the moment he was elected. Kempf, who would officially still be mayor until Dec. 31, called a meeting on Dec. 7, but Studer wasn't allowed to attend the in-camera session.

At that meeting, council talked to officials of Eurocan, the company which planned the sawmill and the B.C. Development Corporation, which was acting on Eurocan's behalf.

After that meeting, the council decided to support the company's application for removal of the 304 acres from the land reserve.

Studer's moment came Jan. 3, his first day in office. He informed council that he was intervening in the Dec. 7 decision and that the matter would be before council again at the next meeting.

Studer got trounced at a Jan. 18 council meeting. With

A strong case—Ney

Vote could spark resident exodus

By DAVE FINLAYSON
Colonist Correspondent

NANAIMO — If voters turn down the $15.5 million sewer and water referendum next Saturday (April 2), residents of outlying areas would have a strong case for wanting out of the city, Mayor Frank Ney said Friday.

Speaking at a press conference, Ney said when the city was amalgamated two years ago the new areas assumed their share of such things as recreation — and the old city welcomed this.

But if the referendum is turned down for the projects, which are for the newer areas, those people would have a right to wonder what the benefits are of staying in the city.

"The old part of the city wanted amalgamation so the new areas could share the recreation costs. Now the pendulum is swinging the other way."

The vote was forced by the Concerned Citizens' Committee who gained sufficient names to a petition. The CCC opposes the city's financing method whereby all city taxpayers pay for all sewer and water projects.

The CCC wants only those people directly benefitting from the work to pay for it.

Ney also said people in the newer areas could justifiably demand a change in the taxation formula and even a rebate, if the bylaws go down.

However, he said he was confident the public recognizes the common sense in the bylaws and the city's approach to the problems of sewer and water.

Ney also said very few areas of the city are going to escape the burden of new mains or replacement of old pipes in the near future.

Although the old part of the city will not directly benefit from the current projects, a recent engineering report indicates the old city will need about $4 million worth of water main replacement, some of which are more than 60 years old, he said.

And he said a sewer study still has to be done, which may uncover similar findings.

Ald. Alex Virostko said it should be made clear that none of the proposed projects are planned in isolation.

Althoug it may appear that water lines will pass through relatively lightly populated areas, in fact they are planned to link up with other lines and provide an efficient water system for the whole of the city.

And he said only a few of the lines are distribution lines to serve small areas.

He said most of the lines are as much as 70 per cent for over-all supply of the city rather than local distribution.

And the planned lines are not a recent city "brainwave," he said. As long as four years ago the Greater Nanaimo Water Board had worked out a long range plan for the city which included many of these current projects.

City administrator Ted Chace said if the bylaws passed the mill rates would not go up until 1979, when the major portion of the money would be needed.

And he said by that time the mill rate could very well go down because of a levelling off of assessments.

In answer to another question, Virostko said the projects would generate about $4.5 million in labor at a time when the city's unemployment is as high as 14 per cent.

He said council would almost certainly stipulate in any contract that as much local labor be used as possible.

Advance poll hints at large turnout

NANAIMO — If the advanced poll is any indication, there could be a big turnout this Saturday for the vote on the controversial $15.5 million sewer and water bylaws.

Returning Officer Kathie Waugh said 279 advanced votes were cast Friday — more than the advanced poll for the November civic election.

Referendums traditionally draw a much lighter turnout than elections. Only 9.9 per cent of the eligible voters turned out last September to vote on the civic election system alternatives.

However, Waugh said this Saturday's vote comes during the schools' spring break when more people are likely to be out of town. Only those who will not be available this Saturday could vote in the advanced poll.

The vote was forced by the Concerned Citizens' Committee, which opposes the financing formula of the bylaws.

The CCC says the city's plan to spread the cost of the projects over all city taxpayers is pandering to developers.

The city maintains it is the only method that is fair to all residents, and was the basis of amalgamation two years ago.

Women jog for jaws

Women have known it all along — that bit about the "weaker" sex is a myth.

Three firemen and their wives were supposed to take part in a walkathon at 6 a.m. Saturday to help raise funds for a Jaws of Life rescue machine for the Sooke fire department.

The walk was walked by the three wives.

One of the firemen came down Saturday with a bug, a fire department spokesman said, and couldn't make it. And, well, the other two decided to postpone their part in the walk until the following Saturday — at 8 a.m.

The three women walked from Woolco on the Trans-Canada Highway to the Sooke Fire Hall, about 20 miles.

They raised about $800 in pledges toward the Jaws of Life. The drive for funds is being sponsored by the Sooke Lion's Club. Next Saturday the men expect to raise about $1,400 in pledges. Total cost of the machine is about $8,000, the spokesman said.

Legal query forces new hearing date

DUNCAN — The date and location of a B.C. Supreme Court hearing to determine whether a recently adopted North Cowichan municipality rezoning bylaw should be quashed, has been changed.

Ken Newcomb, legal counsel for the petitioners Bert Rondenbush and Norman Rooke of Island Shake and Shingle Limited, told the Colonist Monday that he is attempting to have the case heard in Victoria next week.

It was scheduled to start later this week in the Duncan County Court. But the lawyer indicated there was some question about the jurisdiction of the County Court judge who would be hearing the case.

"To be certain about it, we are arranging to have a B.C. Supreme Court judge in Victoria hear the proceedings," Newcomb said.

On March 14, Rooke and Rodenbush filed notice in the Duncan registry that they would apply for an order to quash the bylaw, which halted their plans to construct a shake and shingle mill on the Cowichan Bay property, south of Doman's new mill.

In the filed petition, nine specific grounds are cited for quashing the bylaw.

Fire rips kitchen in suite

DUNCAN — A kitchen was gutted and the rest of the suite damaged by smoke and water Sunday afternoon when a fire broke out in a second storey apartment at 620 Dobson Street.

The occupant of the suite, Mrs. E. H. Cook, escaped uninjured and the Duncan fire-department was on hand before the fire spread through the large apartment block.

The cause was still being investigated, but a police spokesman indicated it started in a garbage bin under the sink in the kitchen.

Damage was estimated at $3,000-$4,000.

New air link nearer

Victoria to Vancouver STOL 'close to mark'

Transport Minister Jack Davis hinted Monday that a short takeoff and landing (STOL) air link between Victoria and Vancouver could be closer than people think.

He declined to make any time commitments but said Gerald Strongman (SC—Vancouver South) was "close to the mark" with suggestions on how to improve transportation links between Victoria and the Lower Mainland.

Strongman had suggested that with a STOL airport at Ogden Point and another in North Vancouver, travellers could move from the capital to downtown Vancouver in about 45 minutes.

"A STOL system could tie in with the new Burrard ferry system," he said. "People could step off the aircraft in North Vancouver and walk right onto a ferry. Within minutes they would be in downtown Vancouver. Or, if they wished to travel to other areas of the Lower Mainland there is a bus terminal close by to give them that method of transportation."

Anticipating criticism from anti-noise factions, Strongman said the DeHavilland-7, the Canadian built STOL aircraft, had a noise level 90 per cent lower than contemporary jets.

"From 500 feet on landing and takeoff the noise level is 85 decibels," he said. "In layman's language that's about the same noise as a diesel dump truck from the same distance. From 1,800 feet away, the noise level would be so negligible that it would not be retained."

Strongman said that at both ends of the run, STOL aircraft would be taking off and landing over open water and would therefore not create any hazard, noise or danger to residential areas.

Urging the government to consider speedy implementation of the air link, Strongman said it could be the forerunner for a STOL system linking all parts of the province. He said that while the departure of Pacific Western Airlines headquarters and maintenance shops to Alberta was not yet a fait accompli, "I don't think anyone is too optimistic about keeping it here." He suggested that a STOL system, with its minimum runway requirements, could more than adequately replace PWA.

Davis told Strongman he was very "close to the mark" with his suggestion for developing "third level air carrier services." He said the third level carriers were already providing great service in other areas of the province "and can provide even more with a little encouragement and help."

The minister said the province had already received a consultant's report "containing all the statistical date we need" on such services and were now working on a report which will "tell us which routes" to adopt first.

The federal government has also conducted studies at Ogden Point and Work Point. Both meet the standards for short takeoff and landing aircraft.

Major construction is at present being carried out at Ogden Point as the federal government builds a new terminal for transport ministry vessels and helicopters. If the proposed STOL transport system comes into being the landing strip would be in the same area.

Saanich putting history in limbo

Saanich council was accused Saturday of "footdragging" on heritage buildings.

Mrs. Carolyn Smyly, 4354 Wilkinson, responsible earlier this year for getting council to resurrect the dormant Saanich Heritage Advisory Committee, said in an interview that council's footdragging was a deliberate ploy to ensure heritage buildings did not become an issue.

"No one can convince me the long-stalling procedure is accidental," she said.

In a January letter to council, she asked why the committee, formed in 1974, had been in limbo and why council had balked at tackling heritage issues.

Council's failure to appoint a chairman was the admitted reason for the committee had not started. That situation was remedied early in February with the appointment by Mayor Ed. Lum of Ald. David Paterson as chairman.

"Although a chairman has at long last been named, we still have had no meeting of the committee," Mrs. Smyly said.

"I feel Saanich (council) would prefer to forget about the heritage issue and are ignoring it in the hope it will go away."

Mrs. Smyly said she was concerned at the lengthy delay in putting the committee to work as every day lost was important and could mean the difference between saving or losing a heritage building.

Various community plans being prepared in conjunction with the over-all Saanich community plan do not, as far as she is aware, contain any heritage input.

"Very little effort appears evident to save our heritage buildings."

There are about 50 buildings worthy of consideration for heritage designation, Mrs. Smyly said.

Wilkinson Road jail, designed by Ridgeway Wilson, who also designed the Bay Street armory, is one building whose future preservation should be tackled immediately, she said.

"Council members who feel the old jail should be scrapped need a lesson in heritage buildings.

"It's terribly outdated for the function it is now performing, but as an architectural landmark it's a very important structure," she said.

Mrs. Smyly said many of the homes she considered worthy of heritage designation were in the High Quadra area.

The winery on Quadra Street, due to be closed next year, was also a fine heritage building as were properties in the Glanford-Vanalman area, the location of a 120-acre industrial zone.

The area was being changed from agricultural to industrial without any consideration for heritage buildings in the area, she said.

Future of the 1861 McKenzie farmhouse near the Douglas-McKenzie intersection also concerns Mrs. Smyly.

The dwelling, the oldest and most historic in the municipality, could be preserved if the committee acted quickly, she said.

Noting that Mayor Lum said recently that the farmhouse was now a modern home, she said: "That's what comes of making decisions by oneself without obtaining input from people who know about such things."

The interior of the building could, she admitted, have been renovated, "but it's the exterior that concerns me, not the interior."

Grave driver

DURBAN, South Africa (Reuter) — Police brought a learner driver to court for practising parking techniques between tombstones in a cemetery.

But the magistrate let him off after listening to what he called the best plea of innocence he had ever heard.

"The inhabitants of the graveyard were already dead so I couldn't possibly hurt them," said Mohammed Cassim.

Fish shop owner fired up

The fat's in the fire but a Saanich businessman intends to battle officialdom anyway.

Barry Shell, owner of Tillicum Fish and Chips, 3000 Tillicum Road, served with a fire marshall's order Friday giving him 30 days to comply with an order of the Saanich fire chief to improve fire safety, said Saturday that he intended to appeal the order.

The chief wants the hood and ductwork in the shop brought up to standard, but Shell points out that soon after purchasing the store he spent $1,000 installing an automatic fire extinguishing system in the deep fryer, making the ductwork, in his opinion, redundant.

"The system resulted in my fire insurance premiums being decreased by 40 per cent," he said. "I'm satisfied the system is good enough."

He said the automatic system and the installation of a fire door at the rear of the store was done "for our own peace of mind," before the premises was inspected by the department.

The ductwork upgrading requested by the chief would cost between $2,500 and $5,000, Shell said.

Fire chief Harold Gains agrees the fire record at the store has been acceptable and that Shell maintains an acceptably clean establishment. He does not agree, however, that this will guarantee a fire-sale future due to the state of the present ductwork and air handling unit.

Dodger caught in squeeze in Grapefruit League action

Major-league clubs are at the height of spring training for the baseball season which opens next week and there is plenty of action daily in the 'Grapefruit League'. Teddy Martinez of Los Angeles Dodgers found himself trapped Monday as he tried to dash home when a pitch got away from John Stearns of New York Mets. Stearns recovered, however, and tagged Martinez out in a run-down.

Canucks playoff hopes may rest on final game

Minnesota North Stars may not be one of the National Hockey League's glamor teams but if there were 30,000 seats in Vancouver's Pacific Coliseum all would be filled on Sunday when the North stars and Canucks close out their schedule play.

It became all but certain that the game would decide a playoff spot when the North stars came through with a 5-4 Monday win over St. Louis Blues, who have clinched Smythe Division honors.

Victory boosted the North Stars, who have a game in hand, into a third-place tie with the Canucks. Three points ahead, but not comfortably safe, are Chicago Black Hawks.

Canucks have the better of it in the last week of the schedule. Their three remaining games are at home, and the North Stars will be playing their fifth game in seven days when they go in against the Canucks for the schedule finale.

Los Angeles Kings are in Vancouver tonight, and the slump-ridden Colorado Rockies, winless in 17 games, are Pacific Coliseum opponents on Friday.

North Stars host Cleveland Barons tonight, then finish on the road with games in Detroit on Thursday and Los Angeles on Saturday before arriving in Vancouver.

Still not quite certain of a playoff spot, the Hawks are in St. Louis Wednesday and in Atlanta on Friday before closing out Sunday at home against Cleveland.

North Stars lost a 3-1 lead and had to come from behind in a somewhat loose and wide-open game.

Blues scored three successive second-period goals to take a 4-3 lead, then the North Stars came back with the tying and winning goals in the last minute of the period.

Once again, it was rookies who bailed out the Minnesota club. Alex Pirus shot the 4-4 goal at 19:05, and Glen Sharpley, with his 25th scoring shot, got what was to be the game-winner 49 seconds later.

Sunday action resulted in the elimination of New York Rangers as a playoff club and a tightening of battles for first place in the Patrick and Adams Divisions as well as more records for Montreal Canadiens. Highlights —

● Rangers became an official casualty when Chicago won a 5-3 decision in a game featured by Bob Murray scoring goals 17 seconds apart in the first minute of the second period. The Chicago defenceman, who had only one goal last season, believes it was his first two-goal effort;

● New York Islanders, who are a game closer to the end of the schedule, closed within two points of Philadelphia Flyers by taking Cleveland Barons, 6-3, with Denis Potvin scoring their last two goals;

● Boston Bruins, who are in Buffalo Wednesday night for their biggest game of the season, moved within a point of the Sabres by shutting out Pittsburgh Penguins, 3-0. Gilles Gilbert needed to make only 11 stops to get his first shutout of the season;

● Canadiens, who have sewn up Vezina Trophy honors by allowing only six goals in an eight-game winning streak, shut the door on the helpless Detroit Red Wings, 6-0. It was the fourth shutout of the season for Bunny Larocque, who faced only 17 shots. Canadiens broke the record of 125 points they set last year, now having 127, and tied their record of 58 wins in a season. Guy Lafleur extended his consecutive-game point streak to 25 with two assists and Doug Risebrough managed his first 20-goal season by shooting his 19th, 20th and 21st goals;

● Washington Capitals scored seven goals for the second game in a row, this time besting the inconsistent Toronto Maple Leafs, 7-4.

Defending champs here tonight

Bruins ready but wary

New Westminster Bruins have their sights set on a third straight appearance in a Memorial Cup series but they're not taking any Western Canada Hockey League opponent lightly.

Bruins have reached the national junior hockey final game in the last two seasons only to lose out to the Ontario champion — Toronto Marlboros in 1975 and Hamilton (now St. Catharines) Fincups in 1976.

This year, the Memorial Cup series will be played May 8-15 at the Pacific Coliseum in Vancouver, almost a second home to the Bruins.

The big black-and-gold squad, visitors to Memorial Arena tonight for an 8 o'clock game against Victoria Cougars, had little difficulty winning its second Western Division championship in as many seasons.

But the Bruins have been less than 100 per cent in recent games, particularly since the loss of star defenceman Barry Beck with viral pneumonia earlier this month.

General manager Bill Shinske said Monday that Beck has resumed skating but may not see action until this weekend.

"Barry lost about 13 pounds so we've had to bring him along slowly," Shinske said. "I don't know if he'll play Thursday (in the opening game of the playoffs against the Cougars). It's up to Ernie (coach Ernie McLean) and he's not sure when Beck will be ready."

McLean has been using several young players in recent games and some of them could see action tonight as Bruins and Cougars wrap up their 72-game league schedules.

John Ogrodnick, Bruce Howes, Terry Kirkham and goalkeepers Larry Lozinski and Richard Martens have been practicing with the Bruins since farm-teams Maple Ridge Bruins and Abbotsford Flyers were eliminated from the B.C. Junior Hockey League playoffs.

"We're not taking the Cougars lightly," Shinske said, "and that goes for Kamloops and Portland too. It's going to be hard getting out of the Western Division again."

Second-place Kamloops Chiefs knocked off the Bruins 4-3 at Queen's Park Arena on Sunday and earned home-ice advantage for their best-of-seven playoff with Portland Winter Hawks which starts Friday in Kamloops.

Cougars and Bruins continue their playoff here Saturday, in New Westminster on Sunday and here Wednesday, April 6.

The Victoria squad has been eliminated in the league semi-finals by the Bruins in the last two seasons. Bruins scored a 4-2 win in the 1975 semi-finals and were 4-0-1 in the 1976 series.

Should Bruins win the Western Division final, they will likely face Brandon Wheat Kings for the league championship and the Memorial Cup berth.

Wheat Kings finished their league schedule Sunday on a record-setting note by hammering the hapless Regina Pats 12-4.

Brandon finished with a record 116 points, four more than the previous mark set by the 1975-76 Bruins.

Wheat Kings had only 10 losses, one fewer than the 1972-73 Saskatoon Blades, and equalled the 1975-76 Bruins for wins (54).

In addition league scoring champion Bill Derlago ran his record-setting goals total to 96, six more than that of former Wheat King Ron Chipperfield, by scoring four goals. Derlago finished with 178 points and topped linemate Ray Allison by 41 points, eclipsing the record of 37 established in the 1967-68 season by Bobby Clarke of the Flin Flon Bombers.

Brandon rookie Brian Propp finished with 80 assists, one more than the record held by Tom Serviss of the 1968-69 Calgary Centennials.

Derlago, Allison and Propp also became the first forward line in WCHL history to finish 1-2-3 in the scoring race.

In other Sunday games, Calgary topped Winnipeg Monarchs 10-7; Saskatoon bounced Flin Flon 8-1 and Lethbridge Broncos posted a 5-3 win over Medicine Hat Tigers.

Wilson to coach Team Canada '77

TORONTO (CP) — Johnny Wilson, coach of Colorado Rockies of the National Hockey League, has been named head coach of the Canadian team competing in next month's world hockey championship at Vienna.

Alan Eagleson, chairman of Team Canada 77, made the announcement Monday night after consultations with Colorado club officials.

Eagleson said he and team general-manager Derek Holmes and Bill Watters assistant general manager, discussed several condidates and agreed unanimously Monday morning to approach Wilson.

"Wilson and club officials Munson Campbell and Ray Miron were enthusiastic about the appointment," Eagleson said.

"Johnny has had NHL experience in Los Angeles, Detroit and Colorado and his work this year with the Rockies made him our choice."

"We were unable to approach him until his team was officially eliminated."

The Rockies were eliminated from the playoffs Saturday night when they lost 2-1 to Atlanta Flames.

Nine Barons ready

TORONTO (CP) — Nine Cleveland Barons have said they will play in the world hockey championships starting April 20 in Vienna after being approached by Team Canada officials, Bill Watters, the team's assistant general manager has reported.

Watters confirmed a report out of Cleveland that the nine players are forwards Dennis Maruk, Al MacAdam, Bob Murdoch, Wayne Merrick, Ralph Klassen and Rick Hampton, defencemen Bob Stewart and Greg Smith and goaltender Gilles Meloche.

Watters, however, denied the part of the Cleveland report that said the nine Barons have been named to the team.

The Team Canada players are scheduled to gather in Toronto April 4 and will depart for two exhibition games in Goteborg, Sweden the following day.

Watters said that 20 players and a coach will be named at a press conference here Thursday or Friday.

Chiefs and Hawks stage wild brawl

PORTLAND, Ore. — Portland Winter Hawks scored a 10-2 win over Kamloops Chiefs Monday night in a Western Canada Hockey League game delayed in the first period by a massive brawl.

Fourteen players — seven from each team — were banished with game misconducts at 16:44 of the opening period when all the players on the ice and several from each bench joined in the fray.

Additional sport P. 16, 17 and 18

Officials assessed 127 of the 244 penalty minutes in the period to the Winter Hawks.

The Chiefs led 1-0 at the time but lost three defencemen in the melee and were no match for the Winter Hawks in the remaining time.

Portland scored six straight goals in the second period and outscored the Chiefs 4-1 in the final 20 minutes.

The game had no bearing on the final standings in the Western Division as Chiefs had clinched second spot on Sunday night. Kamloops finished with 80 points and Portland placed third with 79.

Tony Currie led the Hawks with three goals, boosting his season total to 73. Wayne Babych and Dave Hatheway each contributed two goals and others were added by Barry Brown, Brent Peterson and Blake Wesley. Ryan Hatfield scored both goals for Kamloops.

Portland held a 45-25 edge in shots and took 150 of 294 penalty minutes. Only 1102 fans were in attendance.

Sather steers Oilers toward playoff berth

EDMONTON (CP) — Glen Sather has Edmonton Oilers directed toward a playoff berth in the Western Division of the World Hockey Association although he was not the club's first choice as coach.

Bep Guidolin resigned as coach, but remained as general manager with the Oilers. He admitted Sather was the only man available for the coaching job, primarily because Guidolin's first choice, Larry Wilson, had been hired by Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League.

Sather said in an interview he isn't intimidated by the job and he is looking forward to next year.

But he added "We have to make the playoffs first. And we're going to."

A key is a home-and-home weekend series with Calgary Cowboys this week.

The Cowboys moved within two points of the Oilers Sunday night as the result of a 5-4 win over Phoenix and a 5-2 loss by the Oilers to New England.

In other Sunday games: Winnipeg topped Houston 5-2 with Bobby Hull firing three goals; Quebec Nordiques blanked Cincinnati 4-0 as Real Cloutier scored his 64th goal of the season; and Birmingham blasted Indianapolis, 7-3.

Sather, who played with eight pro teams — six in the NHL — before joining Edmonton this season, owns a hotel near Banff, Alberta's leading ski resort and says he sometimes thinks of retiring there. But now there's a catch.

"This opportunity came up before I expected it though.

"The worst thing is to take over in the middle of the season. We've had troubles in the front office and we've had dozens of player changes, but the biggest problem is that there are some things you can't change this late in the season."

Guidolin had the Oilers upset and tense and Sather moved quickly to change that, being careful, however, not to cast himself as an opponent of the tempestuous Guidolin.

He appears to be succeeding.

Unhappy Ranger flattens Lucchesi

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — Texas Rangers second baseman Len Randle, enraged at being called a punk by manager Frank Lucchesi, Monday punched Lucchesi in the face and broke his right cheekbone. Randle was immediately suspended.

Lucchesi, who last week said he was tired of Randle's griping about his status with the Rangers, was admitted to hospital. A doctor in charge of the hospital's emergency room said Lucchesi was in pain when he was admitted and that X-rays would be taken to determine if surgery would be required.

The Lucchesi-Randle confrontation had been building throughout spring training.

Randle came to camp this season upset because the Rangers already had penciled in Bump Wills, son of former major league base-stealing star Maury Wills, as the starting second baseman. When Wills' picture appeared on the cover of a national sports magazine last week, Randle became even more incensed.

He threatened to walk out of camp but was stopped by pitchers Gaylord Perry and Bert Blyleven and first baseman Mike Hargrove.

Following that incident, Lucchesi said:

"It's just too damn bad somebody stopped him from leaving. I'm tired of these punks saying play me or trade me. Anyone who makes $80,000 a year and gripes and moans all spring is not going to get a tear out of me."

Shortly before the Rangers' exhibition game with Minnesota Monday, Randel confronted Lucchesi at the batting cage.

Lucchesi said Randle came up to him and said 'I don't think you are treating me right,' said club spokesman Burt Hawkins. Frank told him 'let's go over here and talk about it.'

After about two minutes of conversation, witnesses said, Randle suddenly threw a punch at Lucchesi.

Randle stepped back and hit Lucchesi two or three times as he was going down and then hit him while he was on the ground, Hawkins said.

O'Brien held afternoon-long discussions with executive vice-president Eddie Robinson and club owner Brad Corbett, who was at his office in Fort Worth. One source close to the club said Corbett was upset with both O'Brien and Robinson because he had wanted to trade Randle earlier in the spring.

Search on for ancestral roots

Roots success percipitates interest

Genealogy craze hits Americans

The Christian Science Monitor

Like the tail of a comet, a flash of interest in genealogy has followed the book and TV success of Alex Haley's Roots, the black American author's search for his slave-era and African ancestors.

"We experienced a 50 per cent increase in visitors in February over a year ago," says Peggy Tuck Sinko, director of the impressive genealogical section at Chicago's private Newberry Library.

"The minute the cold weather broke, family history searchers started pouring in," says librarian Dorothy Lower of the Fort Wayne, Indiana public library, another highly regarded geneaological collection.

"Orders of microfilm records, the heart of our collection, have doubled in the last month," says Thomas E. Daniels, geneaological department spokesman for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The Mormon Church maintains the largest geneaological library in the world — nearly a million microfilm records and 150,000 volumes — with a staff of 600 experts at its Salt Lake City headquarters.

However, despite the current spurt of visible interest in geneaology a growing interest in the subject has been steadily building in America for at least a decade, most genealogy authorities agree.

Genealogy is generally regarded as second only to stamp and coin collecting as an American hobby.

"This is not a flash-in-the-pan phenomenon," says Mr. Daniels. "If you were to graph it, the present would appear as a bubble on a steady, steep incline in recent years. Five years ago, for instance, we had 1,100 visitors a day. Now we have over 2,000."

Among non-Haley causes for Americans' renewed interest in family roots:

● Bicentennial fallout. "Last year's bicentennial sparked a lot of interest in genealogy," says Miss Lower of the Fort Wayne library. "People wanted to learn whether they had soldiers in their family backgrounds." A similar pickup in genealogical study followed the 1876 centennial, historians say.

● A postwar pattern. "Growth in the study of geneaology has been continuous since the early 1960s," says James D. Walker, genealogy director for the National Archives in Washington., Two similar intense periods of genealogical study occurred earlier in American history, Walker observes — in the 1880s and 1930s. The three study phases to date have followed major wars by about 20 years, he says.

● Reaction to the stress of the 1960s. "The 1960s were a turbulent period," says James B. Bell, director of the New England Historic Genealogical Society. "Political involvements such as the Vietnam War did not make sense. People needed to find their place on the tie line of history to seek their place in family and local history."

● Leisure and affluence. "Many people get into geneaology later in life," says Gilbert McNamee, director of the Bay Area Reference Center, near San Francisco. "There's more money now — and with earlier retirements people have more time."

"We're swamped with visitors in the summertime," says Miss Lower at the Fort Wayne library. "People of all ages come from all over the country to spend their vacations here doing family research."

National Archives genealogist Walker notes a similar vacation hobby trend, as Americans make trips to what he calls the Washington genealogical mecca — the resources held by the Library of Congress, National Archives, the Daughters of the American Revolution Headquarters, and the National Genealogical Society.

News for wine fanciers.

Rodet's famous Côtes Du Rhone now in B.C.

The House of Antonin Rodet has been serving excellent wines to the old world for more than a century. But, until recently, most North Americans knew Rodet wines only by reputation.

Now, however, B.C. wine fanciers have the opportunity to experience Rodet quality at first hand. For Rodet's illustrious Côtes Du Rhone is gradually making its appearance on the shelves of B.C. liquor stores.

The classic Côtes Du Rhone is a full bodied red, with a forthright flavour that sides well with roast beef, steak and other hearty foods. And Rodet Côtes Du Rhone splendidly exemplifies these characteristics.

Try Rodet Côtes Du Rhone soon. A few bottles in your cellar or cabinet will stand you in good stead when company arrives, or when you feel like turning an everyday meal into an occasion.

Bagels: Polish invention has reaped multimillions

LOS ANGELES — It's no joke — the Poles are believed to have invented the bagel. Furthermore, it has grown to a multimillion-dollar industry.

And if those bits of trivia aren't overwhelming, consider this over a morning cup of coffee: to create the perfect bagel it must be both boiled and baked.

The bagel achieves its glossy exterior because it is sprayed with water prior to baking. Unlike doughnuts, which are formed by punching out the centre, bagels are pressed into shape, which explains the irregular shape of the centre hole.

Less than 20 years ago, bagels were little known outside of Jewish communities. New York, for instance, had about 40 neighborhood bakeries which produced them. But with the advent of "Flash frozen" baked goods which could be shipped long distances without preservatives, the bagel was introduced in 1962 to supermarkets across the nation.

Murray Lender, son of the founder of what has become the largest bagel bakery in the United States, says about 80 per cent of the small, hard, crusty rolls are now sold to non-Jewish customers.

The West Coast represents about 15 per cent of the total sales, but the bulk of the market is still in New York.

Lender's built the first automated bagel bakery in 1965 to mass-produce the bread product.

"We are specialty bakers," Lender said here on a recent promotional trip, "and the specialists are thriving because of the trend for hearth-baked bread products and away from sweets and high caloric foods."

Lender denies that his product is fattening.

"The average bagel contains 160 calories," he says. "It isn't the bagel that's fattening. It's the stuff people put on it," notably butter, lox and cream cheese.

It is Lender's firm which has researched the history of the bagel, although he admits the background is hazy — and perhaps apocryphal.

According to Lender, hordes of turkish invaders tried to enter Vienna in 1683, but were driven off by the armies commanded by John Sobiesky, of Poland. Thiusands of sacks of green coffee were part of the booty left behind by the fleeing Turks, and a Polish adventurer, familiar with Italian coffeehouses, asked for and received the unroasted beans.

This man founded the first Viennese coffeehouse and, with his coffee, served small, half-moon-shaped breads called Kipfel. Following his victory, Sobiesky marched triumphantly through the streets, and the grateful citizens clung to his horse's stirrups in admiration. The enterprising coffeehouse owner reshaped his Kipfel to resemble the king's stirrup and called it beugel, the German word for stirrup.

Woodwork aids offenders

VANCOUVER (CP) — Hotplate holders may help keep hard-core juvenile offenders out of hot water.

A woodworking shop which is producing wooden plaques in the thousands for chain stores here is called an "alternate school" by its founder.

Bozo Lalich started the workshop to give employment to out-of-work Skid Road inhabitants, but he sees it as becoming a retraining centre of juvenile offenders.

"This is a start ... my dream for the centre will take a long time, but this is a start," Lalich said in an interview.

Lalich bought woodworking equipment and lumber with a small business loan from a bank. He employs 11 people to make the plaques, which have an Indian motif on them.

The woodworkers maintain a regular eight-hour shift. Part-time workers are paid $3 an hour and full-time $4.

The workshop is a microcosm of the re-training centre Lalich pictures running in the future. He calls it an alternate school.

"It will be based on new learning experiences," he said.

He wants to take the rougher juvenile element from the courts and the prisons and train them to become self-sufficient.

574 die as two 747s collide

—AP

Blackened wreckage is tomb of 248 people aboard KLM jumbo jet

SANTA CRUZ DE TENERIFE, Spain (UPI) — Spanish officials said Monday a misunderstanding involving the American and Dutch pilots of two Boeing 747s and the airport control tower might have caused the crash that killed 574 people — history's worst aviation disaster.

Spanish newspapers said air control conditions at the Tenerife airport were unsafe. One said it was "a disaster that could be seen coming."

It was a disaster that likely would never have happened had not the Canary Island Liberation Movement — a group that wants the mid-Atlantic islands severed from Spanish rule — planted a bomb in the terminal at Las Palmas airport that exploded earlier Sunday.

The blast, which injured eight people caused both the chartered 747s to be diverted to Santa Cruz airport.

Casualty counts varied. The Dutch KLM airlines and Pan American World Airways issued revised casualty lists putting the number of dead at 574 with 68 survivors. Earlier, the Spanish government put the death toll at 562 with 72 survivors.

KLM said all 248 persons aboard its jet — none of them known to be Canadians — were killed.

The Dutch plane, roaring down the runway at 186 miles an hour on takeoff, ripped through the U.S. jet Sunday afternoon and both planes burst into flames. The heat was so intense that the runway asphalt melted.

Pan Am said 326 persons died aboard its plane, which originated in San Francisco, and 70 survived.

One survivor, Jordan Tartikoff of San Francisco, said the speeding KLM 747 already had lifted off the ground when it hit the Pan Am plane.

"The other plane was off the ground," Tartikoff said. "If it had not been, we would all have been hamburger meat. The other plane hit the top of our plane. He had definitely already lifted off."

Insurance experts in New York and London said the insurance and legal liability bill from the collision will exceed $250 million. A U.S. Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said it might take years to determine who has ultimate responsibility for the crash.

A controversy raged over the cause of the disaster. The Spanish news agency Cifra reported the Pan Am pilot may have misunderstood control tower directions and instead of turning into a parking area moved onto a runway in front of the KLM jet.

Pan Am issued a statement in New York denying the Cifra report.

Some foreign pilots suggested there had been a misunderstanding involving the two pilots and the control tower and that the radioed English language directions had been too heavily Spanish accented to be entirely clear.

'It just drove into us'

VANCOUVER (UPI) — The sole Canadian survivor of collision of two Boeing 747 jetliners in the Canary Islands spoke to a reporter by telephone Monday from his hospital bed in Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Spain.

"I was one of the lucky ones," Roy Tanemura of Kelowna said in the telephone interview. "Things happened so fast. We didn't see anything because of the fog . . . It was so foggy we couldn't see it coming. The Dutch plane just drove right into us."

Tanemura escaped with an injured ankle.

His wife, Aya, and travelling companions Dr. Walter and Yvonne Mitchell, also of Kelowna, did not survive. Elizabeth Caza of Windsor, Ont., was also listed among the dead on the Pan-Am plane.

Tanemura, a member of a land survey firm, said he scrambled through the ruptured fuselage of the plane believing his wife was right behind him.

"She didn't come with me," he said. "I guess she couldn't make it up and get out."

Community loses 28 friends

LAGUNA HILLS, Calif. (UPI) — The aviation disaster in the faroff Canary Islands shocked residents of the wealthy retirement community of Leisure World south of Los Angeles: Twenty-eight of their friends and neighbors died aboard the Pan American 747.

A group of 35 residents were on a tour. Only seven survived.

"It's very sad, very tragic," said Barbara Farley, city editor of the Leisure World News, a weekly newspaper distributed in the community.

"We've had a lot of calls and people have been coming into the office to ask about their friends."

Gardom seeking solution

No place to hold disturbed teens

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said Monday his "inherited problem" of what to do with mentally disturbed juveniles was under study but that answers were not easy to find.

Gardon was answering questions asked in the Legislature by Conservative leader Scott Wallace (Oak Bay) who wanted to know why the provincial government couldn't provide adequate holding areas for youngsters with serious mental problems.

Wallace referred to the case of a 16-year-old youth who murdered a 10-year-old girl in Vancouver and had so far had his sentence deferred six times because there were no facilities for him in the province.

He also referred to the suicide of a 16-year-old girl in a Courtenay jail. She had been placed in an RCMP cell because there was nowhere else to hold her.

Gardom agreed that facilities for youngsters with psychiatric problems were inadequate, but he added that he wasn't sure whether the problem belonged to him or Health Minister Robert McClelland.

The attorney-general told the Legislature that the 16-year-old girl who hanged herself in Courtenay was a runaway from a foster home. She was picked up by the RCMP on March 16 after admitting being responsible for a series of tire-slashing incidents.

Routine checks were made with welfare officials and the probation officer and it was agreed that she should be held by the RCMP pending her court appearance, Gardom said.

She was placed in the cells at about 5:30 p.m. and had been visited by a matron every 20 minutes, Gardom said. She was found hanged at 1 a.m.

A three-tired program to fight juvenile crime did not include facilities for disturbed youngsters, the attorney-general told Wallace.

Woman, 21, acquitted in baby kidnap

SURREY (CP) — Rena Marie Conley, 21, of Hayward, Calif., was acquitted Monday in provincial court on a charge of kidnapping a two-week-old baby in September, 1976, from this Vancouver suburb.

Judge W. S. Selbie said the prosecution had not presented conclusive evidence to show Conley knew she was involved in a kidnapping.

Conley was charged, along with Sandra Ann Hanoum, 25, also known as Sandra Ann Gillen with kidnapping Cameron David Green and taking him to California.

Hanoum, also from Hayward, currently is fighting extradition to Canada in a San

Unemployment insurance bill

Controversial debate slapped with closure

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced plans Monday to invoke closure, used fewer than 30 times since Confederation, to limit debate and force second reading of a controversial bill that will tighten the qualifying standards for unemployment insurance.

After introducing a motion in the Commons to restrict debate to only five hours, Manpower Minister Bud Cullen told reporters "a majority government should be able to get its legislation through."

"Why should we be subject to the tyranny of a minority?"

MPs from high unemployment areas, including members of the governing Liberals, have vehemently opposed a proposal to increase the qualifying period for benefits to 12 weeks.

A person now must work eight weeks out of the previous 52 to qualify for benefits.

Cullen told the Commons he will introduce a motion today to set the time allocation. The motion itself can be debated for two hours.

He said there already has been adequate debate on the bill, which has been discussed in the Commons 13 hours and five minutes on four sitting days.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, immediately attacked the closure move as "a clear indication that the government plans to go ahead with a bill that will deprive thousands of Canadians of benefits, partic-

Sea turns tables on 'harnessing' ship

When it was built in Victoria 10 years ago, the federal oceanographic ship Vector was described as an important part of the international commitment "to harness the sea."

Last Thursday the tables were turned in Quatsino Sound when the sea — or part of it — harnessed the Vector.

The 130-foot vessel, which has been used for scientific studies, ran aground and had to be towed free. Federal officials made no public report of the incident and were not in a position to furnish details Monday.

Quatsino Sound cuts deeply into the northwest part of Vancouver Island.

The Vector was towed to the Victoria shipyards of Yarrows Ltd., during the weekend and will undergo close examination today to determine the extent of bottom damage.

Striking against AIB

Montreal millers defy work order

MONTREAL (CP) — Striking workers at three Montreal-area flour mills have voted to continue a walkout despite temporary injunctions issued by Superior Court Monday ordering them to return to work, said a union official.

The workers voted at a meeting Monday to continue their walkout which began eight weeks ago to protest an average 40-cent-an-hour wage rollback ordered by the federal Anti-Inflation Board.

The injunctions, effective immediately and covering a seven-day period, affect 400 workers at Ogilvy Flour Mills Ltd., Robin Hood Multi-Foods Ltd. and Maple Leaf Mills Ltd.

Carl Masson, an official of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, with which the strikers are affiliated, said that if the injunctions are defied, the union could face fines of up to $50,000 a day and its members up to $5,000 a day.

Robin Hood management told the court that the strike had cost the company $1.7 million and that perishable raw materials and finished products worth a further $1.8 million were in danger of decay and contamination.

The three companies are to appear in court next week seeking permanent injunctions.

Meanwhile, a fourth company, Phoenix Mills Ltd., is to petition for a temporary injunction against its 100 striking workers in Superior Court Wednesday.

Bread is available in Montreal despite the strike because flour has been imported from the United States and from neighboring provinces.

Houston chambers buzzing over sawmill

Hostile council blocks mayor

By HUBERT BEYER
Colonist Reporter

Basil Studer is a man with a problem.

He's mayor of Houston, B.C., a town of 2,500 people between Prince George and Prince Rupert.

Studer's problem isn't so much that he's mayor of a small community which is struggling for financial survival much like any other B.C. municipality.

His trouble is that he's facing a six-member council which is hostile toward him and his plan. What's more, the town hall staff refuses to give him a key to his office, and he's being denied access to municipal files. When Studer had to go to Victoria on municipal business, his council refused to pick up the tab and told him if he wanted to go he should do so as a private citizen.

Studer said in an interview in Victoria Monday that he had no idea what he was letting himself in for when he decided to run for mayor of Houston in last November's municipal election.

His reason for running was a proposal to lift 304 acres of farmland from the agricultural reserve to accommodate a sawmill, half a mile from the centre of town.

"Categorically opposed" was his campaign slogan and when the results were in, Studer had beaten his opponent two to one. He's serving the unexpired portion of the former mayor, Jack Kempf, now Social Credit MLA for Omineca.

Studer's troubles began the moment he was elected. Kempf, who would officially still be mayor until Dec. 31, called a meeting on Dec. 7, but Studer wasn't allowed to attend the in-camera session.

At that meeting, council talked to officials of Eurocan, the company which planned the sawmill and the B.C. Development Corporation, which was acting on Eurocan's behalf.

After that meeting, the council decided to support the company's application for removal of the 304 acres from the land reserve.

Studer's moment came Jan. 3, his first day in office. He informed council that he was intervening in the Dec. 7 decision and that the matter would be before council again at the next meeting.

Studer got trounced at a Jan. 18 council meeting. With

WISE . . . TRUCK BUYERS ALWAYS BUY FROM PETER POLLEN FORD

Two families have narrow escape as lightning hits

To Mac McKerracher, of 1209 Rockcrest in Esquimalt, the lightning strike sounded "like the roof of the house coming off."

Although the roof escaped damage when lightning Sunday afternoon shattered a 120-foot-high fir tree 60 feet from the house, the McKerracher property was not unscathed.

"The lightning corkscrewed down the tree and then travelled along our metal clothesline and hit the eye bolt and pulled the pulley off the wall," McKerracher said.

The impact broke dishes in a kitchen cupboard on the other side of the wall.

Chunks of wood from the tree were scattered in all directions, and one piece, 10 to 12 feet long, hit a sundeck two houses away.

The McKerrachers were without power for three hours. Their phone and cable television services were also knocked out.

Another lightning strike demolished a brick chimney from the roof up at a house at 1282 Richardson, the Victoria fire department reported.

The strike flashed out of a connecting fireplace and oil furnace, and it was "remarkable" that there was no fire, a fireman said.

Firemen removed bricks from the roof and helped the occupants clean up.

Early superintendent's history research aided

English
. . . access to records

A history of education in the Greater Victoria region by one of its first school superintendents has been given approval by the Greater Victoria School Board.

The board gave its blessing Monday to a recommendation by community relations director Bill Stavdal that the board become a member of the Greater Victoria Civic Archives Society, at a cost of $100 a year, and that it provide assistance to Dr. John F. K. English in research on the history of the school district.

English was the municipal inspector of schools in the Victoria area before school districts were formed, and when the Greater Victoria district came into being in 1946, he was its first district superintendent. He later was chief superintendent for the provincial government.

Stavdal added that school district records are reasonably complete back to 1946, but before that time they are sketchy, and almost no records exist from the 1800s. This was unfortunate, because B.C.'s public education system began in Victoria, he said.

The board will give English access to its records, and provide him with space, and possibly some typing assistance. Stavdal said he has applied for the services of two students during the summer who can assist English in gathering material.

Kemp Lake search for body

Divers will resume their search today of Kemp Lake, six miles west of Sooke, for the body of Richard Michael Laik, 20, of 394 Walter, Saanich, who drowned in a boating accident between 10:30 p.m. and 11 p.m. Friday.

Laik was with two other young men who were crossing the lake in an eight-foot boat which filled with water and overturned. The two others were rescued by people who heard their cries for help.

The three men were with a group of 12 who were planning to spend the weekend in a cabin by the lake. Only access to the cabin is by water.

Sidney, North Saanich have priority

Outsiders to pay more to play at Panorama

By STEPHEN HUME
Colonist Reporter

Greater Victoria residents who don't happen to live in Sidney or North Saanich will have to pay extra to use programmed recreation at the new $1.85 million Panorama Leisure Centre, although the centre is using $616,000 in public funds.

Sidney alderman and Peninsula Recreation Commission member Jerry Tregaskis told Sidney council Monday that sports clubs from Sidney and North Saanich will have priority over other municipal clubs, and will also be charged a lesser rate to use the facilities.

(The Oak Bay and Esquimalt recreation centres charge equal amounts to all municipalities.)

Sidney Ald. Bernard Ethier objected to discrimination among municipalities, and said the facilities at the Panorama Leisure Centre would become "a hell of a mess."

Ald. James Lang said a Central Saanich father recently told him he was concerned that his children would "have to play hockey at 2 a.m." because of scheduling priorities. The centre is on East Saanich Road, south of McTavish.

Tregaskis
. . . rights not same

"Central Saanich isn't paying a cent toward the centre. so why should they have the same rights as our people" Tregaskis said.

"But why punish the kids?" Ethier enjoined.

"We're not punishing the kids, their parents are punishing them," Tregaskis said, referring to Central Saanich's rejection in November, 1976, of a cost-sharing scheme for the $1.85 million recreation centre for Sidney and North Saanich.

The recreation centre, recently named Panorama Leisure, was given a $616,000 provincial government grant in November, 1976, toward the cost of a sports arena and swimming pool.

North Saanich Ald. Eric Sherwood, also on the recreation commission, said Monday in an interview that Tregaskis "spoke out of line" on a matter that wasn't a commission policy yet.

Sherwood said the commission had "discussed" the fact that $616,000 in public funds were going toward a centre which might have to establish a priority system because of an "overabundance" of users.

"We took it under consideration," Sherwood said, adding that Tregaskis should know that comments on recreation commission policy were supposed to come from the commission chairman, Robert Hope of Sidney.

Poets Streets

Renewal thorny issue

Knock down the old houses and replace them with good apartment buildings that would attract elderly people.

Maintain the homes, for they make up the kind of neighborhood that is sadly lacking in a municipality like Oak Bay.

Those were two sides to a philosophical argument that began to present itself at Monday night's meeting of Oak Bay council.

The question involves the fate of the old district known as Poets Streets — the 1,300-acre gathering of streets running from Elgin to Foul Bay and Oak Bay to Milton.

They proudly bear the names of poets, but to some that is the only real sign of pride left. They consider the district old and somewhat run down.

Ald. Doug Watts said he didn't like to look at it this way, but he felt it would be wise to move toward redevelopment that would see the erection of "first-class apartments."

Old people, he said, would be "delighted to occupy such apartments once they had reached an age when they were unable to maintain individual homes and properties.

If handled properly, federal and provincial financing for such an undertaking could be used in part to ease the heavy tax burden that would fall upon Oak Bay within a few years, he said.

He was basing his case on arguments presented at meetings attended by neighborhood residents. Developers hold options on many of the homes in the neighborhood.

But Ald. John Goult said he felt it necessary to present "the other side of the coin."

The neighborhood, he said, "is perhaps run down as he says, but I think that is partly due to our own indecision."

If council didn't make a decision on what was to happen, Goult said, the district was in danger of falling prey to "block-busting" and other unwanted forms of development.

Arguing that the neighborhood provided a basic need for people on lower and middle incomes, he said: "That is something that does not abound in this municipality."

He also maintained that most of the homes were well kept, and blamed absentee landlords for those that weren't.

Goult disagreed with the belief that elderly people would want to give up their homes and gardens to occupy new apartments.

Ald. Shirley Dowell said more time was needed to digest reports dealing with the question.

"We may not need any more plywood boxes to move older people into — which are firetraps," he said.

Mayor Brian Smith said that in the long run council might want to consider redeveloping part of the area and leaving other parts as they were.

The issue was put over to the next council meeting.

Publisher denies wanting expropriation

Rumor carrying laid to regional members

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

Colonist publisher Richard Bower has accused unnamed members of the Capital Region Board of spreading rumours in what he thinks might be an effort to damage his reputation, as well as that of his wife.

Bower, a key figure in opposing Capital Region plans for a sewage pumping station in Oak Bay, made the charge Monday night as a member of the audience at an Oak Bay council meeting.

His was only one of several attacks on the region's governing body. Before the meeting was over, Oak Bay was planning to disregard its reputation of quiet dignity to march on the Capital Region.

Acting on the suggestion of Mayor Brian Smith, aldermen agreed to seek a showdown with the Capital Region Board April 13 and to take along residents opposing the pumping station.

Council was dealing with a report from last Thursday's public meeting on the sewage question as Bower made his comments.

"It has come to my attention that rumors are being circulated by members of the Capital Region Board that my wife and I would welcome the expropriation of our house to get off the hook with our neighbors," he said.

He said the story was "as ridiculous as it is untrue."

Bower's Beach Drive home on Shoal Bay was one of a number of sites recommended for a pumping station that opponents say would not only be a costly waste, but a threat to private property and health.

An advisory committee to council decided at Thursday's public meeting to recommend a site on the Victoria Golf Club near Newport and Beach. It was chosen over the Bower property in the final stage of an elimination process.

But the final decision would presumably be up to the region.

The committee also agreed to demand that the region consider a report that it would be wiser and much less expensive to scrap the pumping station idea in favor of adding 600 feet to the McMicking Point outfall.

At Monday night's meeting, Bower also branded as entirely untrue a second rumor that his house was so cold he and his wife had to go to the lower floor to keep warm every time the wind blew.

"I don't know the purpose of these rumors," he said. "Perhaps the Capital Region Board wants to take away our reputation as well as our home.

"Certainly they have succeeded in badly damaging our sense of humor."

He declined afterward to name any specific members of the board in connection with the rumor-spreading charge.

Council, which approved the public meeting report recommending either the golf course site or the McMicking outfall extension, felt that the whole question should be reopened for debate with the region.

It will seek to set up the April 13 meeting with the board. Smith said a sizable delegation representing both council and residents would likely force the region to find a large hall for the meeting.

Ald. Doug Watts, arguing that the whole question of the pumping station should be re-examined, said it appeared ridiculous to spend several million dollars on such a project when the outfall could be extended for about $150,000.

He said it appeared the region had made up its mind some time ago and was refusing to listen to reason.

"The regional board goes on like a juvenile once it gets its mind set," he said.

The question of the value of regional government came up later while council was discussing a Castlegar city council call for a provincial government examination of the concept.

Watts suggested it was a form of government that might have been successful in some respects, but on an over-all basis had become a "growing bureaucracy that really isn't accomplishing much."

Because of its current battle with the region, council decided to table the matter for a month.

30-day duplex delay imposed

If you were planning to start building a duplex in Esquimalt, forget about it. Council Monday night imposed a 30-day moratorium on the issuance of building permits for duplexes.

The moratorium was imposed to give council time to prepare a zoning bylaw amendment approved in principle Monday setting the minimum frontage along the square feet with a 60-foot minim7m frontage along the building line.

Ald. Ken Hill, who introduced the moratorium motion, said that if 30 days wasn't long enough he would propose again that it be extended for another 30 days.

Although Esquimalt's subdivision bylaw sets out standards for duplexes, there is no minimum lot size established for numerous individual duplex-zoned lots scattered throughout the municipality.

Ald. Larry Mann, whose planning zoning and housing committee originated the proposed amendment, said it was necessary to curb the buying up of single-family houses on small duplex-zoned lots and subsequent development of them.

Mann told council that the amendment wouldn't stop developers from consolidating adjoining lots for duplex development.

Both Ald. Ted Wright and Ald. Conrad Lundgren opposed the amendment. Wright said he had seen a number of "very nice duplexes" on lots with less than 60-foot frontage. Lundgren agreed, and told council the problem of the apparent crowding effect of duplexes in neighborhoods could be combatted by downzoning.

Ald. Jim McEvay said that all downzoning would achieve would be the exclusion of all possible future duplex development other than in subdivisions.

Under new business, Mann tried to introduce a motion that would ban all through truck traffic from Craigflower Road. On Mayor Art Young's urging council agreed to refer the matter of the truck ban to committee for study. The committee may consider asking the province to establish a truck route bypassing the municipality.

Until sewers upgraded

Gorge-Burnside zoning downgraded temporarily

Saanich council voted Monday to downzone land in the Gorge-Burnside area from medium-density to single-family.

The new zoning — in a district bounded generally by Obed, Gorge, Tillicum and Harriet — will remain until municipal services are adequate to service apartment construction, Mayor Ed Lum told about 100 persons attending the public hearing.

The cost of upgrading services and roads in the area was estimated at $12 million by assistant municipal engineer George Gunn.

Council has endorsed redevelopment of parts of the Gorge-Burnside area to medium density use, and enlarging the Gorge trunk sewer is scheduled to start later this year.

Gunn said a portion of the sewer trunk would be completed this year with the entire project probably taking 18 months to two years to complete.

He said there was insufficient sewer capacity for any increase in density in the area to be redeveloped with apartments.

When services were upgraded, he said, the medium-density zoning would be reinstituted.

Lum said that the sewer upgrading could be stalled because of difficulty in obtaining easements. Expropriation proceedings might be necessary, he said.

"What we are doing by recommending downzoning is for the protection of the municipality," he said.

In other zoning matters, council:

● Rejected an application by architect Liam Cassidy to rezone land at the corner of Shelbourne and Donnelly for a two-storey office building.

The proposal was opposed by several neighborhood residents on the grounds that traffic would be a problem and that the plan was not suitable for the 17,766-square-foot tract of land.

It was noted that only 29 parking spaces were included in the plan for the building, which would have housed a bank and professional offices.

● Approved a land-use contract for construction of a bank on the northeast corner of Cadboro Bay Road and Penrhyn.

The 22-foot building would be constructed on a lot now housing a "country cottage."

Richard Boss, newly-elected vice-president of the Cadboro Bay Ratepayers' Association, said the group wanted more time to study the proposal and asked that the matter be tabled for one month.

Sheila Anderson opposed the plan to replace the existing bank in the area's shopping centre with the new structure on grounds that it would start erosion of the residential area.

Ald. John Mika argued that the "drastic step" should not be taken until the community plan had first been discussed with the association members.

The lot in question was, he said, a key one in the entire commercial block, and council's credibility would be at stake if the proposal was approved.

Other rezoning applications endorsed were:

● One for 10 townhouses at 400 Culduthel.

● A 50-foot parking lot extension to Brady's Fish and Chip Shop at 20 Burnside West.

● Rezoning to enable development of a 43-lot subdivision on the north side of Lucas Avenue at the end of Morris Drive.

Strait air link 'close to mark'

Transport Minister Jack Davis hinted Monday that a short takeoff and landing (STOL) air link between Victoria and Vancouver could be closer than people think.

He declined to make any time commitments but said Gerald Strongman (SC—Vancouver South) was "close to the mark" with suggestions on how to improve transportation links between Victoria and the Lower Mainland.

Strongman had suggested that with a STOL airport at Ogden Point and another in North Vancouver, travellers could move from the capital to downtown Vancouver in about 45 minutes.

"A STOL system could tie in with the new Burrard ferry system," he said. "People could step off the aircraft in North Vancouver and walk right onto a ferry. Within minutes they would be in downtown Vancouver. Or, if they wished to travel to other areas of the Lower Mainland there is a bus terminal close by to give them that method of transportation."

Anticipating criticism from anti-noise factions, Strongman said the DeHavilland-7, the Canadian built STOL aircraft, had a noise level 90 per cent lower than contemporary jets.

"From 500 feet on landing and takeoff the noise level is 85 decibels," he said. "In layman's language that's about the same noise as a diesel dump truck from the same distance. From 1,800 feet away, the noise level would be so negligible that it would not be retained."

Strongman said that at both ends of the run, STOL aircraft would be taking off and landing over open water and would therefore not create any hazard, noise or danger to residential areas.

Urging the government to consider speedy implementation of the air-link, Strongman said it could be the forerunner for a STOL system linking all parts of the province. He said that while the departure of Pacific Western Airlines headquarters and maintenance shops to Alberta was not yet a fait accompli, "I don't think anyone is too optimistic about keeping it here." He suggested that a STOL system, with its minimum runway requirements, could more than adequately replace PWA.

Davis told Strongman he was very "close to the mark" with his suggestion for developing "third level air carrier services." He said the third level carriers were already providing great service in other areas of the province "and can provide even more with a little encouragement and help."

The minister said the province had already received a consultant's report "containing all the statistical date we need" on such services and were now working on a report which will "tell us which routes" to adopt first.

The federal government has also conducted studies at Ogden Point and Work Point. Both meet the standards for short takeoff and landing aircraft.

Trustees won't help fix track

Upgrading of the track at Centennial Stadium will have to go ahead without the assistance of the Greater Victoria School District, the school board decided Monday night.

According to Centennial Stadium Committee chairman Robert Hutchison, "there is now an urgent need to resurface the track, to widen it, and give it a 400-metre length."

Hutchison told the board that the stadium committee is looking for ways to pay for the improvements, and has asked municipalities involved in the original stadium construction costs to pay per-capita shares of the estimated $145,000 needed to carry out the work.

The federal and provincial governments and the University of Victoria may pay most of the cost — as much as $108,000 — Hutchison said, and he "invited" the school board to make a capital contribution.

District superintendent Allan Stables told the board the school board is strictly limited by the Public School Act regarding contribution toward capital financing.

The board can only spend money for capital projects which take place on its own grounds, and which the board controls, Stables said.

Trustee Lavinia Greenwood suggested that rental fees for use of the stadium should reflect capital as well as operating expenses.

In the end the board went with a motion by trustee Peter Yorke that it not contribute to the capital expenses of the stadium.
